BARRETT GOES DOWN WITH PARTY

Bill Bennett Rolls to Victory

British Columbia voters returned the province to Social Credit rule Thursday, bringing a dramatic end to the New Democratic Party's first, brief taste of office.

Bill Bennett's re-vitalized Social Credit party captured 36 seats in the 55-member house, leaving the NDP with 17 members — less than half its former strength.

In the biggest upset of the election, Premier Barrett lost his own Coquitlam seat as well as losing the strong 38-seat mandate he was handed in 1972 when voters rejected the 20-year rule of Social Credit under the new premier's father.

There is likely to be a recount in Coquitlam, where 38-year-old car dealer and Socred George Kerster narrowly defeated B.C.'s first socialist premier. If the count stands, the 45-year-old Barrett could look for a safe seat (or) he may have to return to the social work profession and the NDP will look for a new leader.

The possibility of recounts in as many as six ridings may not be decided until Dec. 23, when the final figures from returning officers in the ridings will be available.

B.C.'s other political leaders kept their seats, Bennett by a substantial margin in Kelowna; Gordon Gibson by a narrow vote in North Vancouver; and Scott Wallace by a good majority in Oak Bay.

Gibson and Wallace will both be their parties' only representative in a strongly polarized legislature. Wallace was the sole Tory before dissolution but Gibson lost his seat-mate David Anderson.

In accepting defeat in Port Moody early Thursday evening, Barrett wished the new government luck and promised to hand over the reins within a week.

"We have not lost anything tonight except the battle," he said.

"Little old fat Dave," as the premier referred to himself during the campaign, appeared shaken by the results early in the evening but later returned to his usual jocular manner and joked with reporters and party faithful.

He remained in good spirits even after learning that he had been defeated.

In Kelowna, premier-elect Bill Bennett told a cheering crowd he would immediately set about putting B.C. back on the road of free enterprise.

"Tomorrow we go to work because this province needs a government to get to work right away to solve the problems," he said after thanking his supporters and the electorate.

He said his party won with people, not with flip slogans, and "put forward the strongest fighting candidates I have ever seen put together by a political party."

His father, who took power for 20 years in 1952 with a minority government, shared in the pandemonium of his son's victory.

"This is a great night for the people of British Columbia" said the elder Bennett as he blinked back tears. "A people's government is back in power again." The voters put their finger on the hot stove of socialism in 1972 "and tonight they have taken it away,"

The NDP and Social Credit were the only parties to field full slates of 55 candidates as Barrett's snap election call Nov. 3 left the Liberals and Progressive Conservatives with depleted war chests.

The Liberals, under Gordon Gibson, who was elected leader 38 days before the 38-day campaign began, suffered their worst defeat in history in B.C. They had two seats in 1956.

The Tories under peppery Scott Wallace, a 46-year-old general practitioner, also hit a low ebb as polarization of

Island Bucks Trend

Vancouver Island bucked the Social Credit onslaught in Thursday's voting but the NDP just managed to hold five seats while the strong Socred challenge netted three.

A head-on battle in Esquimalt riding has Lyle Kahl of Social Credit with a shaky lead of less than 200 votes over the NDP's Frank Mitchell with over 2,000 votes yet to be counted.

That's the number of people whose eligibility has to be confirmed before their ballots are counted because they were not on the voters' list. The final total will be known in 11 days. Turnout in Esquimalt was 72 per cent.

Most shattering blow delivered by voters came in the two-seat Victoria riding where former Liberal leader David Anderson was destroyed, finishing a distant fifth.

Socred Sam Bawlf, who topped the municipal polls a year ago as alderman, showed he still has that vote-gathering magic by finishing first again.

In Oak Bay the personal popularity of Tory leader Scott Wallace once again carried the day over a powerful campaign by Social Credit. He held a 3,000-vote majority over Frank Carson.

Former Conservative Hugh Curtis, who is likely to be a cabinet minister in the new Socred government, proved switching parties hadn't hurt him a bit in Saanich and the Islands riding.

He turned back a challenge from Carol Pickup, a newcomer for the NDP, by better than 4,000 votes, well up from his majority of 2,500 in the 1972 election.

The NDP held its four up-Island ridings but only in Alberni did incumbent Robert Skelly have a relatively easy time of it, capturing slightly better than half the votes. At that, his 1972 majority was trimmed by 3,000 votes.

Cabinet Cuts Pledged

KELOWNA — A "very, very difficult transitional time" faces British Columbia with the change from an NDP to a Social Credit government, premier-elect Bill Bennett said today after his overwhelming election victory.

The new Socred government will be faced with presenting a spring budget drawn up by the NDP administration during the fall, said Bennett.

New cabinet ministers will be asked to carefully review each department and its financial estimates for the new budget, he said, but time will be short and Christmas holidays for the civil service will make the task that much harder.

He pledged that the Socred's first budget will be balanced.

Without knowing the actual state of the province's finances, Bennett said he could still make the commitment that the Socreds will never go into deficit budgeting.

The NDP's budget plans may therefore have to be changed to keep within that pledge and the Social Credit's own election promises will also have to wait on the economy.

Bennett's new cabinet will not be unveiled until next week but the new premier promised as an immediate economic move, a cut in all cabinet salaries.

He would not specify how much the salaries will be reduced but ministers now receive $48,000 and the premier's wage is $52,000.

Bennett faced a barrage of questions at the morning news conference in his home constituency but his answers were mostly vague.

In many areas of immediate concern, the new ministers will have to make decisions on how to implement a new free enterprise approach.

There are difficult economic times ahead, said Bennett, and the new government will have to be realistic in its plans. That planning began today with meeting in Vancouver between Bennett and party and campaign officials.

The new government's first task will be the departmental

OTTAWA — The cabinet Friday overturned an opinion by the Anti-Inflation Board that the postal workers' settlement of a 38 per cent wage increase over 30 months is too high.

"We thought it was in the greater public interest to let the agreement stand," said Prime Minister Trudeau after the meeting.

Trudeau insisted the cabinet's decision will not weaken the federal restraints program.

"It would if we were to do this consistently, but we are acting under the law and the regulations as they stand now," he said.

The government will seek royal assent to make its anti-inflation bill law later today or Monday — so avoiding any immediate repeats of direct cabinet appeal.

A special administrator — yet to be appointed from the revenue department — will handle cases the anti-inflation board decides are excessive. There also will be an appeals tribunal from board rulings.

Reaction from union and labor officials to the cabinet's decision was uniformly supportive.

"It's what I was expecting. I'm not surprised at their decision," said Joe Davidson, president of the 22,000 members of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers (CUPW).

Asked if he was happy about the decision, Davidson said:

"We went on strike for more so how can I be overjoyed at getting what we are justly entitled to?"

Joe Morris, president of the Canadian Labor Congress (CLC) said he anticipated the cabinet decision.

"I think they were wise in this instance, particularly in light of the involvement of Mr. Makasey (Postmaster-General Bryce Mackasey) right through the bargaining," he said. "Any other decision would have been intolerable."

Polarized Vote Shows In 2-Way City Result

By LIZ HUGHES and KIT COLLINS

Victoria voters mirrored B.C.'s polarized vote Thursday, electing a Socred and an NDPer to the legislature in a race full of surprises.

Incumbent Liberal David Anderson was turfed out, showing only a poor fifth; alderman-developer Sam Bawlf topped the poll and for the first time in 42 years, Victoria elected an NDP representative, community worker Charles Barber.

The two-seat riding teetertottered until the last minute and at times it appeared Victorians might do the unexpected and elect two New Democrats.

Bawlf and his cheering supporters at the Pier 16 restaurant in the Princess Mary hailed the Victoria and the provincial Socred win as "fantastic," the only disappointment of the night being the defeat of running-mate Ian Rendle.

Barber's victory was eclipsed by the defeat of the party, the downfall of its leader and the rejection of Gordon Hanson as the second NDP candidate in the riding.

But it was a victory nonetheless and the crowd of about 400 NDP supporters had to take what it could get in a night that left many campaign workers in tears.

Anderson, surrounded by about 50 saddened Liberal supporters, took his defeat philosophically, insisting his party was selling a "luxury that the people of B.C. feel they can no longer afford."

The election was black and white, said the former Liberal leader, "It was either vote the rascals in or throw the rascals out."

The "straight polarization" of the election campaigns led to his defeat, Anderson said, with voters deciding they couldn't afford what the Liberals had to offer — "rational and careful debate."

Anderson and running mate Terry O'Grady conceded the race at about 10:30 p.m., hitting the NDP headquarters at the Union Centre first and then the Socred's sumptuous

Ex-Grits To Star In Cabinet?

By LINDA HUGHES

Speculation on the composition of Bill Bennett's cabinet began as soon as the Social Credit victory became apparent.

The three former Liberal MLAs will likely form the cornerstone of the ministerial group which will take over government business in about a week's time.

A Socred insider suggested today the new government is "long on victory and short on talent and experience" and the toughest jobs will undoubtedly be handed to Pat McGeer, Allan Williams and Garde Gardom.

The other nine incumbent MLAs will likely be up for cabinet posts along with a couple of former Socred members and a handful of hopeful newcomers.

Bennett has indicated he wants to keep the size of the cabinet down and the post of minister without portfolio for northern affairs will probably disappear.

But he has also promised a ministry of the environment and, in the future a department of inter-governmental affairs.

The finance portfolio will be a key to Bennett's juggling of positions.

He, like Barrett in opposition, has promised not to keep the finance job for himself, but, like Barrett, may decide he has to keep it under his thumb at least at the start.

IRA Gunmen Free Pair, Surrender

LONDON (UPI) — Police broke a six-day-old downtown London siege today and captured four Irish Republican Army gunmen who came out with their hands up.

The gunmen first freed Mrs. Sheila Matthews, 53, one of the two hostages they had held since police trapped the IRA men in the Matthews' apartment Saturday night.

Police marksmen covered the scene, lit by floodlights in the early evening darkness, as the men and hostage John Matthews, 54, appeared one by one on the second floor balcony.

The siege had lasted 140 hours.

All four gunmen were wedged into a small police panel truck which sped away, its siren wailing. Watching newsmen and passersby broke into applause.

The gunmen were wanted for an 18-month series of bombings in and around London which killed 27 persons and injured 540.

One was believed to be a man known as Michael Wilson, Britain's most-wanted terrorist. His fingerprints were found at the scene of the murder two weeks ago of Ross McWhirter, co-founder of the Guinness Book of Records, who was shot and killed on his own doorstep in the first such IRA assassination in the British mainland.

Scotland Yard chief Sir Robert Mark said the men would be charged with "a wide variety of crimes which come loosely under the heading of terrorism."

Mrs. Mathews was rushed to University College Hospital where spokesmen said she was "remarkably well considering the circumstances" and was being treated for shock. "She is all right," a spokesman said.

The four-man IRA gang was cornered Saturday night after a crosstown police chase in which — unusual for London — shots were fired.

reviews, he said, and the ministers will bring their findings to the first cabinet meeting.

The person in charge of the Insurance Corporation of B.C., for example, will have to recommend how private insurance companies can be brought back into the car insurance field in a fair manner.

In housing, the minister in charge will have to evaluate the future of the government-owned Dunhill Corporation, which Bennett described as a "spectacular failure."

The new consumer affairs minister will study the province's price freeze and the new government itself will have to begin discussions with the federal authorities on the entire anti-inflation program.

The Socred labor minister will be faced with the task of administering the NDP's back-to-work legislation, which expires in mid-January.

The pulp workers are still voting on their contract and if they should reject it, the new government will have to decide what action to take when the legislation expires.

Asked about the future of the NDP's political appointments, Bennett said he expected "most of them to tender their own resignations."

Appointments to Crown corporations and other positions, covered by contracts will be dealt with on their own, he said.

During the first session in the spring, which may be later than usual because of the budget review, the Socreds will enact their promise to bring in an auditor-general and an ombudsman.

Settlement of Indian land claims will also be a priority matter, he said.

Election of the Social Credit government is the first step in increasing investor confidence in the province, said Bennett, and the next step will be creation of a climate of confidence.

Socred Victory

the vote left both parties with only their leaders in the legislature.

Social Credit gained heavily from the other two private-enterprise parties as it increased its share of the party vote by 17 per cent from 1972 to 48 per cent.

Forty per cent was good enough for the NDP to form a government in 1972 but not on Thursday. The Liberals took eight per cent while the Tories were left with four per cent.

The Liberals, who ran 49 candidates, and the Conservatives, who fielded 29 in this election, combined for nearly 30 per cent of the party vote in 1972, the last time a provincial government was defeated.

Gibson, the boyish-looking former aide to Prime Minister Trudeau, defeated North Vancouver District Mayor Ron Andrews by 290 votes. He entered the legislature in a February, 1974, byelection win by 57 votes.

"The old polarization game worked again," he said. "It's just as simple as that."

He and Dr. Wallace campaigned to present a moderate voice for middle-of-the-road voters. They said neither Social Credit nor the NDP deserved to form a government and they sought the balance of power in a minority-government situation.

The soul-searching and analysis began almost instantly.

"The single factor is that we didn't get enough votes," said Barrett with a grin. "It was a ganging up."

The B.C. situation was comparable to the end of the Union Nationale regime under Maurice Duplessis in Quebec when Liberal "Jean Leasage and his reformers came in," Barrett said.

The Lesage administration was defeated after six years in office in June, 1966, by Daniel Johnson's Union Nationale administration.

"It is the fear of change that exists with people."

The Social Credit administration will keep all his government's social programs intact, he said, as well as its economic program.

"We have a fantastic record. We have nothing to be ashamed of.

"We have lost nothing tonight in terms of getting people to understand that there is a more loving way of building a community."

Mr. Barrett said his party has never been given up its principles for opportunism.

"We have never lost our idealism in a quest for power. "We have a proud past, a proud present and prouder future."

He said the NDP had mismanaged the economy, choked off incentives for resource industries and contributed to inflation with budget overruns and excessive wage settlements for its employees.

One of his favorite campaign themes was that Social Credit really didn't want to chance NDP programs. "They just want to get rid of little old Fat Dave."

Former Liberals Pat McGeer and Garde Gardom carried the Vancouver riding of Point-Grey while across Burrard Inlet, Allan Williams, another Liberal MLA who joined Social Credit this fall, carried West Vancouver-Howe Sound.

Another victory on the North Shore came from Jack Davis who was defeated as federal Liberal cabinet minister in 1974. The former fisheries and environment minister beat Colin Gabelmann of the NDP in North Vancouver-Seymour.

Frank Calder, first native Indian elected to a Canadian parliament in 1949, was another political chameleon. He won the far-flung northern riding of Atlin as a Social Credit member, joining the party shortly after the election was called after saying the NDP riding association planned to dump him. Calder was fired from Barrett's cabinet in 1973 for what the premier called a personal indiscretion.

In a rare race where third party voting played a part, Karen Sanford hung on to Comox riding for the NDP, thanks to a strong showing by Vic Stephens, the Progressive Conservative candidate.

Sanford's margin over Socred's Dan Hanuse was less than 400 votes, in contrast to her majority of better than 6,000 in 1972.

New Hope On Shooting Information

Police said today they are hopeful of new information Saturday in the shooting of a 22-year-old Victoria man whose riddled body was found in bush north of Langford Lake Dec. 2.

Colwood RCMP made two appeals for help in their investigation and received many calls from the public having to do with the last known movements of Malcolm Preston Cunningham, of Victoria.

One of the lines of investigation has been a connection between the deceased and the illicit drug trade.

One Flood After Another

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

For Joanne Taylor the past 10 days have been one flood after another.

On Thursday she had just cleaned up the mess when the Dec. 2 rainstorm left five inches of water in the finished, furnished basement of her and her husband, Barry's, bungalow at 4137 Tuxedo in Saanich.

Today she's having to start again. This time seven inches of water flooded the basement — the water coming from a high pressure feed line which burst early this morning about 100 feet from the house.

Saanich police said they received an anonymous call at 5 a.m. from a person who said he could hear the sound of water running down Tuxedo.

When police, firemen and water works employees investigated they discovered a river of water flowing down the street to Ambassador, east to Morris and south to Nicholson where a small lake had formed.

A spokesman for the Saanich water works department said it took three quarters of an hour from the time of the first report before the valve was shut off. He estimated more than 200,000 gallons of water had gushed from the burst main. By 6:30 p.m. most of the water had disappeared down storm drains.

Although the cause of the rupture hasn't been determined, the spokesman presumed blasting near the main Thursday may have weakened the 12 inch asbestos cement pipe.

He said Wagon Train Construction have a contract to install a new storm drain and sewer for a proposed subdivision just to the north of the flooded area. Workmen were at the site to 10 p.m. and when they left there was no indication of any leaks, he said.

Ironically Mrs. Taylor complained that on Thursday she was inconvenienced by a lack of water when workmen, without warning, shut off the main between 2 p.m. and 9 p.m.

"Yesterday we didn't have any water," a neighbor said. "Today we have too much."

Besides the Taylor residence two other homes on Tuxedo, two on Ambassador and one on Nicholson reported flooding. No damage figures are available as yet.

Mrs. Merrilla Okopski of 964 Ambassador said she was awakened at 5:15 a.m. by police asking her to check if the basement of her home was flooded. She did and it was.

"Have you ever seen a deep freeze float? . . . well I did."

The water which was four feet deep in some parts of the unfinished basement knocked out the furnace, damaged a washer and dryer, and was starting to trickle into the trunk of her car when waterworks employees arrived with pumps and mops.

Bawlf left his 400 supporters waiting until the Victoria Socred win was a sure thing and then made a dramatic entrance to a rythmic round of applause.

He had mixed feelings about his own win, he said, because Rendle wouldn't be occupying the adjacent seat in the house, "but it is a tremendous victory for Social Credit in B.C."

"But we can't go away feeling there is something tonight which has been vanquished. After a hard-fought campaign, we have to heal some wounds and get it (the province) moving."

A veritable forest of Bawlf and Bill Bennett buttons and boaters adorned the Socred supporters who had a hearty round of "boos" for dejected-looking Dave Barrett when his picture was flashed on the television screen.

Bawlf's celebration speech was peppered with "let's get B.C. back on the track again" slogans, but he could barely be heard at times over the cheers.

The scene at the NDP's Victoria headquarters was different and though Barber's significant win was hailed by one and all, the defeat of the party, Barrett and Hanson sent supporters into each others arms in tears.

The Union Centre auditorium contained a fair number of NDP executive and administrative assistants and other civil servants, whose jobs, if not abolished, are at least tenuous.

One of the main questions of the evening was "what are you going to do now?" and one civil servant, whose job is probably quite safe, said she would rather "collect welfare from the Socreds rather than work for them."

A nervous and blushing Barber said he would trade his Victoria win for a B.C. win," but that doesn't seem how it will be this time. The next few years the NDP will spend rebuilding throughout the province."

Barber is not the first NDP or CCF to be elected in Victoria.

In 1933, retired Church of England clergyman Robert Connell was elected a CCF member in the provincial election in the four-member Victoria constituency but CCF representation disappeared at the 1937 election in Victoria.

Connell, who came to Victoria from Britain in 1888, died in 1957.

At one time he was CCF leader in British Columbia. He broke with the party and formed a B.C. Constructive Party but none of its candidates was elected in 1937 and he retired from politics.

He was an archdeacon in the Anglican church and was well known as a naturalist.

Barber said the voters of B.C. were frightened and chose their government on the basis of that fear, rather than what they really wanted.

The biggest cheer of the night came for the defeated Hanson, 32, who said the Socreds "can have their day now."

But the NDP will work and build in the next three or four years he said and will "come again for the next 20 years."

Cabinet

McGeer, as the long-time Liberal finance critic, is the obvious choice for the job if Bennett does give it up. McGeer as a university medical researcher is also a likely candidate for the health ministry.

Williams will probably be given one of the toughest jobs, either labor or lands, forests and water resources. He acted as the Socred's labor critic during debate of the NDP's back-to-work legislation this fall.

Assignment of the resource portfolios will be a difficult task and it may be in the future that Bennett will combine mines with lands and forests under a general resources ministry.

Williams and Gardom, as established Vancouver lawyers, are considered the likely choices for the attorney-general post but Bennett may well want them for other jobs and give newcomer Rafe Mair, a Kamloops lawyer, the nod as attorney-general.

Gardom may get education or transport and communications. Re-structuring the Insurance Corporation of B.C. will be a tough job for the new transport minister and South Peace River's Don Phillips is a likely candidate for that job or any of the other key positions outside the social services field.

His neighbor in Chilliwack, Harvey Schroeder, has been the Socreds' education critic but its unlikely he'll get that job. Bennett will more likely give him a minor portfolio, if anything.

Frank Calder, the Atlin MLA who was kicked out of Premier Barrett's NDP cabinet because of an incident involving Victoria police, may think the importance of his defection to the Socreds guarantees him a portfolio but he too may be out of luck.

Jim Chabot, once labor minister in the old Social Credit government, can probably expect an important portfolio, but Hugh Curtis, the Conservative convert, may not get the kind of key portfolio most observers expected. Curtis kept a very low profile during the campaign and may have put himself out of the running for a top job.

Alex Fraser of the Cariboo and North Okanagan's Pat Jordan are the other Socred incumbents who can expect posts. They are likely to get some of the lighter weight jobs like recreation and conservation, consumer affairs or public works.

Grace McCarthy, a former minister in the old Socred government and the person largely responsible for re-organizing the party after the 1972 debacle, is bound to get a post and provincial secretary is probably a good bet.

Cyril Shelford from Skeena is another old Socred minister who may get the nod again and former Liberal MP Jack Davis who won in North Vancouver-Seymour could easily get the environment portfolio.

On Thursday cloudy skies with sunny periods and a few snowflurries provided the main weather picture over most of B.C. A weather system approaching from the west brought precipitation to the north coast and the northern portions of Vancouver Island this morning. This weather will spread over the remainder of the coast by late tonight and then pass inland. As this disturbance moves down the coast the precipitation in the form of snow will change to rain at times. Lesser amounts of precipitation will accompany this system eastward across the province overnight and Saturday.

NATO Offers Big Pullout

BRUSSELS (CP) — The North Atlantic alliance, led by the United States, will launch a major disarmament effort next Tuesday, offering to withdraw nuclear warheads from Western Europe if the Russians will withdraw tanks from Eastern Europe.

Completing a two-session, NATO foreign ministers agreed today to propose the withdrawal of 1,000 American nuclear warheads from Europe, as well as some F-4 fighter planes and Pershing missiles, providing Moscow will withdraw a full tank army — 68,000 men and 1,600 tanks from Central Europe, authoritative sources said.

The offer was not spelled out in the ministers' communique but West German officials said the proposal will be unfolded Tuesday at the Vienna reduction-of-forces talks that have been stalled for two years.

The communique said NATO foreign ministers viewed with concern the continued rapid growth of the power of the land, air and nayal forces of the Warsaw pact, "which exceeds its apparent defensive needs."

The foreign ministers—including those of Canada, the United States, Britain, France and West Germany—reaffirmed determination to persevere in efforts to place relations with the Soviet Union and other Warsaw pact countries on a more stable basis.

Turning to the results of the 35-state European security summit conference in Helsinki, the ministers said they attached high priority to the full implementation of confidence-building measures, closer economic co-operation and a lowering of barriers between the people of East and West Europe.

"Noting that only a short time had elapsed since Helsinki, ministers hoped that substantial progress would be seen during the coming months," the communique said.

The sources said the ministers decided to make the proposal at the Vienna talks—deadlocked for the last 26 months—before Dec. 18, when negotiators there begin a Christmas recess.

Since Kissinger made his proposal, negotiators from the 15 NATO nations have been working at NATO headquarters here on whether to accept it.

The United States has about 7,200 tactical nuclear weapons in Western Europe, about double what the Soviet Union and its Warsaw pact allies are believed to have.

WARNING ON ANGOLA

BRUSSELS, Belgium (UPI) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger said today the United States "will try to prevent" the Soviet Union from becoming dominant in Angola through massive arms shipments there.

At a news conference, Kissinger repeated earlier warnings that the Soviet arms shipments to the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola threatened to upset detente.

Referring to the Soviet Union, Kissinger said: "the United States will try to prevent one party, by massive interference, from becoming dominant."

Kissinger, however, declined to spell out what specific actions the United States might take and refused comment on reports that the Ford administration was considering $50 million in aid for Angola.

Kissinger spoke about Angola at the close of a two-day session of the NATO foreign ministers during which the situation in that African country was discussed along with the state of east-west relations, the strength of the Atlantic Alliance and other issues.

Meanwhile, the Soviet-backed Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola has decided to release two CBS newsmen and one South African journalist arrested last month for suspicious activities, Radio South Africa said in Johannesburg Thursday.

U.S. Blacks Mercenaries?

GARDEN CITY, N.Y. (AP) — The Long Island newspaper Newsday quotes U.S. intelligence sources as saying that the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) is recruiting black veterans to fight as mercenaries in Angola.

Newsday says that Roy Innis, CORE's chairman, has admitted that civil rights organizations have been recruiting blacks, but he said they would serve as a "police force" for the war-torn African country.

The newspaper also quotes Innis as saying that the recruiting is being done at the request of the Organization of African Unity in an attempt to mediate the civil war between three factions.

Innis indicated that no recruits had been dispatched yet, the newspaper says.

Angolans Seek Entry

TORONTO (CP) — Fifty Angolans who fled their homeland in the wake of Angola's independence from Portugal have applied for refugee status in order to remain in Canada, a spokesman for the group said. Immigration department spokesman Ron Bull said Portuguese fleeing Angola cannot be considered refugees because they can settle in Portugal.

Britain Votes No On Hanging Call

LONDON (Reuter) — The British Parliament rejected by a 361-232 vote Thursday night a fresh call to bring back hanging for terrorist murders.

The non-government motion, presented by a Conservative opposition member, had become a major political issue here because of the extension of a guerrilla campaign by the Irish Republican Army (IRA) from Northern Ireland to mainland Britain.

Some 50 people have died in 150 bombings and shootings on the mainland in the last three years.

On the last occasion the death penalty was debated by the House of Commons a year ago, it was rejected by a sizable majority.

The debate cut across party political lines. The ruling Labor party mostly backed the view of Home Secretary Roy Jenkins that it would be wrong and counter-productive to reintroduce the death panalty for terrorist murders, and make harder the task of police combatting kidnappers.

But Jenkins assured MPs concerned about the IRA attacks: "There will be no amnesty. I recognize no political excuses for cold-blooded crimes of murder or maiming. Those who have committed them will serve in jail for decades and in some cases until the end of their lives."

There was strong support for hanging from the Conservative opposition whose members repeatedly stressed that public opinion in Britain was in favor of the death penalty and said it was the only firm way to deal with the bombers.

Warning Given On Eggs

That was the message Thursday from a U.S. Federal Trade Commission judge, who ordered the egg industry to stop running commercials that claim there is no scientific evidence of the health dangers from eating eggs.

Judge Ernest Barnes said the National Commission of Egg Nutrition, founded four years ago to combat the negative publicity due to medical findings that eggs have a high cholesterol content, must stop running ads proclaiming the safety of the eggs.

The egg lobby has spent thousands of ad dollars aimed at convincing the public that "there is absolutely no scientific evidence of any health hazard from eating eggs."

GIRLS KILL CLERK

NEW YORK (AP) — Three teen-age girls fighting on a Queens sidewalk clubbed and kicked to death a subway change-booth clerk who tried to break up their brawl, police say.

Fred Pirone, who would have celebrated his 54th birthday today, was pronounced dead on arrival Thursday night at Long Island Jewish Hospital. He was married and the father of two daughters.

Police said that when Pirone tried to stop the fight, the girls turned on him. One struck the would-be peacemaker on the head with some object and then all three kicked him repeatedly, police said.

The girls were taken into custody, but their names were not released because they are all younger than 16.

Bill Bennett's Deserved Victory

In the first few minutes results fluttered back and forth like a fibrillating heart, but there was never any real doubt. Social Credit was on its way to a majority victory. Three and one half years of David Barrett's reformist government had been enough. The people were ready for a change. Only a little more than three years ago a fickle public turned out Social Credit because of boredom and lack of social change. Now they were scared, and it was back to tried and true Social Credit.

The night belonged to Bill Bennett. Sneered and jeered at, this neophyte politician took a discredited humbled party by the scruff of the neck and molded it into a winning political machine. Despite this newspaper's lack of sympathy for Social Credit, we admire Bill Bennett. He has taken a disparate group of people, and corralled them under his father's banner. What emerged belongs to the younger Bennett. Now he must hold them all together, a task far more formidable than the victory achieved Thursday night. Even the initial task of forming a cabinet could spoil the new premier's leading edge. The uneasy coalition that calls itself Social Credit must prove to British Columbians its leadership capabilities. Minutes after victory was ensured the jockeying began. It is up to Bennett to prove the trust British Columbians have invested in his leadership.

As for David Barrett and the New Democratic party, the Times is sad they did not gain victory and a second term. In defeat Barrett was gracious, saying the Social Credit victory was well deserved, a natural result of the British parliamentary system. With hindsight we can say that the NDP relied too much on the powers of its leader. Barrett is a formidable politician. But too much responsibility was placed on his shoulders and not enough on the party. Put another way: too much Manny Dunsky, not enough NDP record. The clown and anguish act was not enough for the circus which is B.C. politics. Barrett emphasized nationalism and abstract values. Bennett concentrated on the economy and money in the pocket. The British Columbian voter is more concerned with what's on his hip than his mind. It's a human failing and easily exploited.

Given all this, the NDP increased its popular vote from something slightly over 39 per cent in 1972 to 40 per cent in 1975. At the same time the party dropped 21 seats to Social Credit. The results of 36 Social Credit opposed to 17 NDP are almost an exact reversal of the 1972 results. B.C. politics are still a joust between two extremes. The Times was heartened to see Dr. Scott Wallace re-elected in Oak Bay and Gordon Gibson in North Vancouver Capilano. Vestigial moderate politics remain an option in the province.

The electorate's decision is inviolate. If the Times hoped it might have gone another way, we still wish Bill Bennett's government the best of luck. He has worked long and hard for this victory and deserves its fruits. The premier-elect spent two hours in our editorial offices last Saturday morning to provide us with background. It is this kind of attention to detail that makes a winner. As Bennett said Thursday night, "We didn't try to win it with glib slogans . . . we'll bring strong leadership back to this province." The Times found strong leadership in David Barrett, but we're willing to be convinced by Bill Bennett.

Habitat Hassle

There have been few reversals as dramatic as Vancouver city council's decision this week to switch tracks suddenly and support the United Nations conference on human settlements — called Habitat for short — scheduled to be held there next June.

Despite the rationalizations, the attempts to justify the abrupt shift, Vancouver's city fathers do not come out of the affair looking very good. Council cited fears for the city's safety as one of the main reasons two weeks ago when it voted 9-1 to ask Ottawa to cancel the conference.

Unwillingness to shoulder the extra policing costs — estimated to be about $500,000 — was also a factor, but it seems that distaste for the UN's recent anti-Israeli stance and the Palestine Liberation Organization played a bigger part.

Only one of these factors has changed. Urban Affairs Minister Barney Danson has offered $300,000 to help with the costs of providing security for the conference. Despite the noble sentiments expressed two weeks ago council swung around to back Habitat 7-3 this week.

We think it was the right decision, and only regret that Vancouver city council couldn't have spared itself a lot of embarrassment by doing the right thing two weeks ago. With the two contradictory decisions it managed to alienate just about every sector of opinion, and now looks like it only came around to backing Habitat because it was bought off by Ottawa. All in all, a shabby performance.

". . . have you got anything in edible hats? . . . I'd like to honor an election bet . . ."

Immature Hysteria

I always felt that Canadians were above the sort of immature hysteria about pornography that seems to affect our neighbors to the south. It seems I was wrong.

While reading your Nov. 24 issue I came across a disturbing article. Some local concerned citizens felt the need to purge the "smut" from our local stores. If this is a free country then I have the right to decide whether or not these magazines appeal to me or not. I don't appreciate having somebody else deciding what I can read. If these people were so concerned about good government we would all be a lot better off.

They feel that my children have the right to learn about how the world and the universe operate, but not how their bodies operate. It seems they would rather have their daughters come home pregnant than let them know that contraceptives are available. I feel it is wrong to dictate to a child on how he or she will live his life. It is better to give all the information you can and let him make his own decision. I think you will find most kids are smarter than you think. — Earl D. Goudie, Sooke.

Labor Leaders

Now that an impartial (CBC) poll shows that Canadians are in favor of economic restraints, (61 per cent for, 22 per cent against, the rest undecided), maybe the Len Guys and Joe Morrises and Grace Hartmans of this fair country will realize that "labor" is not the CLC, nor is it B.C. Federation of Labor, nor is it Joe Davidson, but rather the millions of plain workingmen and workingwomen who are being led by the noses by a handful of opportunists who shouldn't even be allowed to organize a frisbee tournament.

On the other hand, don't bet on it, for if these people had any common sense, the situation would not have risen in the first place. In short, the situation is so ridiculous that one can talk more sense to a shop foreman than one can to a shop steward. And if the so-called labor leaders become any more removed from their memberships, they'll fall off the globe. — Zdravko Krznaric, R. R. 1, Cobble Hill, B.C.

Business Help

In reference to the article, Firms Back Convention Centre, in the Nov. 24 Times:

I had the opportunity to visit a convention centre at a seaside resort in the state of Oregon, some three years ago, this centre was built at practically no cost to the city through the generosity of local and state wide lumber and building material companies. The materials used varied extensively with each type being indicated by a wall plaque describing the nature of the material be it heavy lumber, veneer, or masonry along with name of company donating same. Are our British Columbia companies not prepared to follow this type of example, especially for the capital city of the province? A brochure of same and a more detailed letter was forwarded to Mayor Peter Pollen during the early part of his tenure in city hall. Maybe the new team at city hall could look into this method of saving the taxpayer some dollars and have a convention centre that the companies would be proud to have participated in. — H. Alexander, 4 Gorge Road East.

Amnesty Global

Not since Hitler's time have we seen the kind of torture that is now practised in the Soviet Union.

A young mathematician, Leonid Plyushch, was picked up, hustled off to a psychiatric prison against the agonized protests of his family and once in the prison he was injected with massive doses of insulin and other drugs, enough

Plyushch had signed a petition to the United Nations protesting the lack of civil liberties in the Soviet Union. The same petition had been signed by the physicist Andrei Sakharov, but Sakharov has just been awarded a Nobel prize for this kind of activity.

Then Plyushch had also sinned by writing privately some essays on freedom and civic responsibility, and the secret police found out that these essays existed.

Protests on behalf of Plyushch have been strong and worldwide. In August, 1974, more than 950 distinguished mathematicians from all western countries sent a telegram to Premier Alexei Kosygin. The telegram was never acknowledged. In April, 1975, a world-wide demonstration was organized by the International Committee of Mathematicians To Defend Plyushch. Telegrams and other messages rained down upon Soviet embassies all over the world.

In Canada there were messages from lawyers, psychiatrists, Fellows of the Royal Society, scientists, and the mathematics department of every major university. But when the Soviet embassy in Ottawa was asked some days later for their response to these messages their reply was that they had received no messages.

On Oct. 23, a mass meeting was held in Paris. Sponsored by a galaxy of French leaders, including Jean Paul Sartre, Nobel prize-winning physicist A. Kastler, the dean of the mathematical community in France, Henri Cartan, this meeting called together not merely mathematicians and scientists but thoughtful persons in all walks of life who realize that to let stand the kind of torture endured by Plyushch is to weaken the moral fabric of our society.

To save Plyushch will require persistent increasing pressure. Amnesty International has been acting vigorously on behalf of Plyushch. Anyone and any organization that would like to help can communicate directly with the embassy of the U.S.S.R. in Ottawa and ask that the torture of Plyushch be stopped. — Israel Halperin, Professor of Mathematics, University of Toronto.

Appalling Decision

After 20 years in the Canadian aircraft industry, I was very interested in your editorial comment (Dec. 2) on Ottawa's decision to spend a $1 billion on 18 Orion aircraft from Lockheed in the U.S.

Some five years ago the LRPA (long range patrol aircraft) study group was set up in Ottawa to recommend a replacement for the Canadian CL-28 Argus. The very nature of this group, being made up of representatives from departments of defence, transport, supply and services, tended to preclude a sound independent decision based on the "national interest."

It was quickly established that the serious contenders were the Boeing 707, the DH-HS Nimrod and the Lockheed Orion. The 707 has a flight profile quite unsuited for patrol function; the Nimrod is a modified Comet—a 20-year-old aircraft; the Orion is a modified Electra—another 20-year-old. None of these planes has advantages over the Argus which justify a $50 million per aircraft price tag. In fact each has penalties—range being one (as your editorial rightly states).

Ottawa, it appears, is ready to spend some $50 million per plane for an aircraft whose civil version could not be worth more than $5 million. Apparently we are spending $45 million per aircraft for custom equipment, support services, spares and the electronic package.

For our billion dollars we are getting an old turbo-prop aircraft to replace an old piston-engined aircraft, better crew comfort and detection gear, and some Canadian employment through offsetting contract arrangements. These modest improvements are not worth the price.

This is a bad deal. It's another case of expediency in place of wisdom; another step in the long trail of appalling decisions by Ottawa in this field which started in 1958 with the expensive deployment of the useless Bomarc missiles.

The often-stated Liberal defence policy is the creation of a highly mobile, well-equipped, self-contained striking force—ready for immediate deployment at home or abroad. How this policy can be served by committing the bulk of our hardware funding to the Lockheed Orion is a mystery that maybe Mr. Trudeau can answer.—Ian Cass, 3844 Merriman Drive.

60 YEARS AGO

From the Times of December 12, 1915

VANCOUVER — Parker Williams, socialist member of the B.C. legislature, delivered a strong anti-administration address before a a good-sized audience at the Labor Temple today under the auspices of the People's Forum. He raked Sir Richard McBride, Attorney-General Bowser and others of the cabinet with cutting sarcasm and pointed charges of negligence and maladministration. Such handling of provincial affairs, he declared, were responsible for the present financial conditions, though Sir Richard was trying to hide behind the cloak of the kaiser. It was not the war which had caused the slump, said Williams, but the manner in which the Conservative government had handled affairs.

New Buildings Add to Inflation

CALGARY — Speaking of inflation, have any of Ottawa's resident wizards taken a run lately at calculating the weight to attach to the waste factor in the inflation spiral?

Anyone with half an eye can see it operating out of control all across the country from high-rise construction to supermarket shopping carts. For starters let's take a once-over-lightly look at a single aspect of conspicuous waste in commercial construction in such places as Toronto, Winnipeg and Calgary.

The best place to start is smack in the centre of the King and Bay intersection in Toronto where you could almost say conspicuous waste began. It was here 15 years ago that the Toronto-Dominion bank launched the chartered banks on a round of bank president one-upmanship.

Until the Toronto-Dominion Centre came along, Canadian banks had opted for restrained oppulence in their head offices. They went for buildings which gave depositors a feeling of confidence in the solid, if stolid, feet-on-the-ground soundness and stability of the repositories of their savings. Then T-D changed everything with its black glass window-wall skyscraper at King and Bay.

Gauche Edifice

As the T-D bank was going up the well-mannered and gentlemanly restrained putdowns of the project emanating from the executive suites of the other banks filtered out to their customers in the boondocks. This gauche edifice would undermine T-D's image with conservative customers. It would starve for tenants. It would . . .

The prophets of doom were soon chewing on crow. The response was so good that T-D was soon planning to add a mate to the first building. Nothing is ever so enchanting to executive chiefs of chartered banks as some other banker's idea that jells.

The T-D centre was magically transformed from a white elephant into a burr under the seats of other bank presidents. Even the thought of an upstart outfit like T-D upstaging them turned them a bilious green.

First to act was the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce which got going on a higher, wider and gaudier edifice across the street. The Royal Bank of Canada snuck into action a couple of blocks to the south. The bank of Montreal turned the corner of Bay and King into the most people-polluted corner in the country by belatedly getting into the skyscraper act.

The wastage involved in all this has been nothing short of horrendous when one contemplates the magnitude of destruction of perfectly good and useful commerical space involved. The T-D had to buy up and dismantle a dozen commercial buildings before it began demolishing its own imposing former head office. These structures provided scores of business enterprises with adequate office and retail and wholesale space at rents they could afford.

The Bank of Commerce displaced only two or three substantial office buildings. Now Montreal is reducing everything to absurdity. In order to compete with the other banks in the race up the status pyramid, it has demolished its own, new, postwar 16-storey building, the Royal Trust 10-storey building and the 22-storey Toronto Star building.

TORONTO

What all this amounts to is that the chartered banks and-or their developer partners have combined to destroy several million square feet of perfectly useable office space in buildings that were good for another 25 or 30 years at least. It was space which was developed when building costs were at rock bottom, mortgage rates were low and buildings were built to last. Most important of all, it was office and retail space which required a miniscule economic rent compared with what will have to be charged for the new stuff.

But the project now being developed by the Eaton consortium a few blocks north of King Street will probably have put more people out of satisfactory low-cost rental premises than all the banks put together.

So much for Toronto. In Winnipeg, the thing is just beginning. There, for the last year, the Trizec Corp. has been bulldozing away the entire block of buildings at the west's most famous intersection — Portage and Main.

When it gets through it will have wiped out a score of old office buildings and stores which have survived several Winnipeg booms and busts. Many of the buildings were obsolete. Many of their tenants hung onto business by their teeth. But they survived because rents were low.

Within the area, however, were several prospering businesses which did not want to move. To assist the site clearing, the city resorted to expropriation to get rid of them.

The Calgary experience is more akin to that of Toronto than Winnipeg. It has been going on here for 10 years and is just now reaching a peak. Two chartered banks are joined with developers in the skyscraper competition.

To make room for its 45-storey tower, the Bank of Nova Scotia bought up and demolished the town's most commodious movie theatre, a 10-storey hotel and a next-to-new office building, along with half a dozen prosperous retail stores.

Rents Doubled

Directly across the street the Bank of Montreal also demolished a 10-storey hotel, an office building and a dozen stores on two avenues and another street.

What is the impact of all this destruction of perfectly usable and thoroughly satisfactory accommodation on the cost of doing business in Canada? Certainly the loss of so much commercial space has inflated rents in surrounding accommodation. One displaced tenant reports that he is now paying $8 a square foot for office space, about double his previous rent.

Rents as a cost of doing business are reflected in the price of everything we buy and every service we use. Can any country afford to be as profligate as Canada has become in destroying so much real wealth in the form of commercial property?

And replacing it with less durable and twice as expensive substitutes? In normal times, never mind during inflation? Or does nobody in this country any longer believe in that ancient axiom — waste not, want not?

Elmer Gantry Politics NDP Downfall: Pollen

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

The NDP government's downfall was the direct result of disenchantment with Elmer Gantry-style politics, Victoria Mayor Peter Pollen commented today.

Pollen, who had predicted the Social Credit victory with surprising accuracy six hours before polls closed Thursday night — he gave the Socreds 37 seats, NDP 17 and Liberals one — put much of the blame on Dave Barrett's "bungling" and evangelical approach to campaigning.

"As I said weeks ago, this bunch were giving socialism a bad name," he said.

"They had become a party of dogma, cant and deceitful rhetoric rather than honest socialist principles. It's a goddam shame, really."

Pollen said he considers the "heroes of the right" to be those former Liberals — Allan Williams, Pat McGeer and Garde Gardom — who had bitten "that horrible rancid bullet" to lend a cohesiveness to the Socred cause.

By contrast, he said, "the anti-hero on the left was the guy who turned out to be the Elmer Gantry of provincial politics, and that was Barrett.

"He really did become a populist and forgot his socialism in a welter of corny jokes."

Pollen considers Bill Bennett has a wealth of talent to call on in making his cabinet selections, and is optimistic that municipalities will see "major strides" in revenue sharing and financial co-operation with the provincial government.

Oak Bay Mayor Brian Smith wasn't surprised at the results in either Oak Bay or Victoria ridings.

In the former, he said, it was a case of "an independent-minded, fiercely loyal electorate who supported the local member they respect and who served them well."

And in the latter he had predicted the Sam Bawlf-Charles Barber result for both men were good candidates, Bawlf outstandingly so.

Smith said he hopes for "some good things" to result from the Social Credit sweep, particularly in easing the financial plight of municipalities.

He noted that both Bawlf and Saanich-Islands victor Hugh Curtis (former mayor of Saanich) understand the problems of municipalities "in going to the table with a tin can to beg for money."

Saanich Mayor Ed Lum, a staunch Socred for many years, was much more enthusiastic, describing the party's return to power as "fantastic."

Lum said the former Socred government was a "godsend" to B.C. municipalities, which have been fighting for three-and-a-half years an NDP government that wouldn't listen to their pleas.

"The Socreds will take notice of the things we are wanting and give municipalities a fair return," he predicted.

Esquimalt Mayor Art Young said he was stunned by the results.

" For all the government's faults they have treated municipalities quite fairly," he said.

"But that didn't seem to have any influence on the vote; it was a straight left-and-right vote," Young said.

Smiles, Optimism All Round from Business

VANCOUVER (CP) — Financial spokesmen expressed optimism Thursday for British Columbia's future following the Social Credit victory.

"Election of a new government will generate a measure of confidence that has been lacking here for three years," said G. Bain Langley, senior vice-president for B.C. of the Royal Bank of Canada.

"I still hope we will have a reasonable opposition," he said, "but there should be an almost immediate impact on the financial climate here — Social Credit has indicated it is a free enterprise party, and this is a free enterprise province."

Langley said he was not sure what Social Credit's attitude was towards the New Democratic Party's B.C. Savings and Trust Corp., but "I hope the new government will wipe it out. I, certainly, have never seen the need for it."

George Sherwood, chairman of the Vancouver Stock exchange, said renewal of investment interest in B.C. will alleviate the unemployment situation; not only in the mining and forest industries, but also in the provision of social capital.

"I trust premier-elect Bennett will take steps quickly to revive the mining industry," he said. "For example, any change in the ridiculous royalty set-up would make a big difference to mining.

"I can also see a real increase in business activity. The resultant increase in taxation will help the government with its social programs."

Sherwood said British Columbians have lived in an atmosphere of fear for the past three years. Only in the last six months has there appeared any change in attitude, with signs of dialogue between business and government.

"I hope we will see more of the money that is raised being spent in B.C. where it should be," he said. "Any increase in new financing will stimulate activity on the stock exchange."

NDP policies have been destructive, said Cyril White, president of the VSE.

"The people of B.C. have shown they don't want socialism — the 1972 election result was an accident," he said.

White said he did not look for any immediate sharp rise in the local stock market, but investors outside B.C. should soon show renewed confidence in this province.

Tony Hepburn, head of research for Odlum Brown and T. B. Read Ltd., said the result will come as a surprise to investors in eastern Canada who had been expecting an NDP victory.

"There should be a strong rally on the VSE," he said. "In those stocks where the fundamentals are good, for example the coal industry, I think the rally could be sustained for some time.

"Also, investor confidence — which is so vital for the stock market — will help to keep things buoyant. I think the mining industry here will enjoy a major upsurge."

Albert Hall, chairman of the Bank of B.C., said the outcome is good for the province, and "with free enterprise back, I hope to see more investment money coming into B.C."

Fast Action As Market Swings Up

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

The Vancouver Stock Exchange surged upwards this morning.

By 9:30 a.m. more than 1.7 million shares had traded or about 200,000 more than usually are traded in a full day. Orders continued to pour in.

"The market is responding very strongly," a VSE official said. "We didn't expect anything like this."

In Victoria, James Bassett, Vancouver Island director of the Investment Dealers of Canada, said investors were moving into forest industry shares as well as mines.

MacMillan Bloedel and Doman Industries shares were both up strongly in the early trading, he said.

Afton Mines, which plans a copper smelter near Kamloops, rose 75 cents to $5.75 in early trading.

Gibraltar was up strongly on heavy volume and Placer Development also was up.

Bassett said the election of a Social Credit government could continue to produce a short-term surge in the market, depending upon announcements made by the new government.

Any long-term surge, however, would depend upon world market conditions for B.C. lumber and metals.

Other B.C. stocks to move upwards after the Social Credit victory were Cominco, Westcoast Transmission and B.C. Tel.

The takeover of B.C. Tel had been a major plank of the NDP, although Premier Barrett said earlier this year that the takeover had a very low priority.

Bennett has indicated he will sell government shares in private companies purchased by the NDP government.

Another Victoria stockbroker said that while prices were up across a wide front in Vancouver, there already were signs of profit-taking.

For example, while some lower-priced mining shares like Northair and Carolin had risen sharply, there were some large "sell" orders, indicating investors were taking profits after holding the shares for some time.

Northair rose 26 cents to $2.71 in early trading while Carolin was up 20 cents to $2.05 before profit taking began.

The broker said if prices continued to move upwards for the next two weeks there could be a significant stock market recovery in Vancouver.

Education Hopeful

VANCOUVER (CP) — Education officials expressed hope Thursday that the new Social Credit government in British Columbia would follow through on campaign promises to increase financial aid to school districts.

Virginia Beirnes, chairman of the Vancouver City College council, said that community colleges which had their budgets cut this year by the New Democratic Party hope "we can depend on Mr. Bennett's promises."

Social Credit leader Bill Bennett promised to increase financial aid to community colleges and to expand the college system within the framework of existing campuses.

Bill Broadley, president of the B.C. Teachers Federation, said that judging from Bennett's election promises, it appears the Social Credit government will have a more positive eductaion policy.

"I think NDP policy in education was very good but there was so much criticism ... that it seemed much worse than it really was," Broadley said.

Insurance Men Set To Return

VANCOUVER (CP) — A British Columbia insurance company spokesman predicted Thursday that the private insurance industry will be selling auto insurance as soon as the new Social Credit government carries out its pledge to permit competition.

The New Democratic Party government established in 1973 the government-run Insurance Corporation of B.C. as the sole agent for auto insurance in the province.

A. E. Warrick, vice-president of Unigard Mutual Insurance Co. Ltd. and chairman of the B.C. branch of the Insurance Bureau of Canada, said there will be quite a number of private firms in the field.

"We have got to get back in the ball game," he said. "We have a lot of work to do but those who stayed in — and I'm glad we were one of them — are going to be rewarded."

Warrick said that he felt certain the industry would continue its challenge about the legality of the NDP law giving ICBC a monopoly on auto insurance.

The industry has claimed that the law setting up ICBC is ultra vires and although it had been turned back in the Supreme Court in B.C., the industry said it would take the matter to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Warrick said this was still necessary if only to settle the position of the industry and because there might be other provinces attempting to do what has been done in B.C.

He said the industry is convinced that ICBC is here to stay and will be a formidable competitor that will keep private industry on its toes.

"We're going to have to show the public that free enterprise can work, and we're happy to take up the challenge."

One good thing, he added, is that competition will give the public assurance that there will be no repetition of the ICBC strike.

"What has happened is going to be a good deal for the motoring public all round."

Resurgence Forecast in Mining

VANCOUVER (CP) — Mining officials are predicting a resurgence of the industry and a renewal of capital investment following the election of a Social Credit government.

They also expect a repeal of legislation by the former New Democratic Party government which they said had brought new mining ventures to a halt in the province and turned operating margins to losses.

J. D. Little, president of the Mining Association of B.C. and executive vice-president of Placer Development Ltd., said that the "industry cannot help but be hopeful for the future in view of the statements made in the platforms of the Social Credit candidates."

"It means we can look to the future with enthusiasm and encouragement," he said.

Little was appointed to a special mining study committee by NDP mines minister Gary Lauk, just before the election was called Nov. 3.

"Regardless of the election, there had to be changes in the legislation if the mining industry was to even sustain itself, let alone grow," said Little.

"The changes still have to be made.

"Removal of the royalty legislation will give mining a chance to survive, even in the present depressed economic conditions. We are very encouraged."

Patrick Reynolds, president of Bethlehem Copper Corp., said he was delighted.

"Not only mining, but all the support industries can go ahead creating new jobs and wealth for B.C. and Canada," said Reynolds.

"I'm happy to know that the voters have realized that jobs and opportunities for the man on the street are of prime importance and are aware that big brother government is not the answer.

"I also expect better labor-management relations because both have the same goals."

Gerald Hobbs, president of Cominco Ltd., said it is "a useful thing to see a government with a solid mandate, which will be significant reassurance to the people operating in this province."

"It should result in a resurgence of capital investment," he said.

William Dunn, vice-president of the B.C. and Yukon chamber of Mines, said the chamber is "pleased to see a majority government that will be able to carry things out."

"The chamber would hope to work with the Social Credit government so that exploration and development of new mines can expand," said Dunn.

"We have opposed the ministerial discredition in the NDP legislation and we think the new goyernment will lay down rules in the areas of environment, safety and ownership and let us go to work.

"As for taxes, we expect the new government to get together with the federal government so that the mining industry will not pay any more taxes than any other industry," he added.

SLUMP STILL WORRY

VANCOUVER (CP) — Spokesmen for the forest industry said Thursday they are pleased to see a private enterprise party form the next government, but added that the major problem is still a world market slump.

The Social Credit party has "done damn well" to form a majority government from the 10 seats it salvaged in the 1972 election, said J. V. Clyne, former chairman and now a director of the giant MacMillan Bloedel Ltd.

"I think the new government is going to have a huge task before it because of the tremendous number of economies that are going to have to be affected," said Clyne.

"There is a lot of waste that has got to be stopped and that is not easy for any government.

"I am very pleased for the economy of the province because I think otherwise it might have gone down the drain.

"It is too early to tell what effect the election will have on forest investment but it will remove the uncertainties," Clyne said.

"So many were uncertain where B.C. was going. The markets are very dull but if you can see a clear road ahead you can do some planning.

Clyne said he thought the Social Credit government would study carefully any steps to return to the private sector the forest companies which the New Democratic Party had acquired.

He also thought the government, as 82 per cent owners of Canadian Cellulose Co. Ltd. might want to reassess a recently-announced expansion plan for the company's Castlegar operations.

Tom Rust, chairman of both Weyerhaeuser Canada Ltd. and the council of Forest Industries of B.C., said: "We are very happy to see the return of a free enterprise, more-business-oriented government."

Don't Tamper with Labor Code, Union Chiefs Warn New Gov't

B.C.'s labor leaders are warning the new Social Credit government against tampering with the B.C. Labor Relations Board.

Jack Munro, president of the 42,000-member International Woodworkers of America, one of the NDP's strongest supporters, said it would be "extremely disturbing" if the new government attempts to abolish the permanent labor relations board and the B.C. Labor Code.

"We are not prepared to be treated as nonentities. I strongly suggest that the new government does not attempt to suppress us. We have matured greatly in the last three years under a government that understood the problems of the working people," Munro said.

Syd Thompson, president of the Vancouver IWA, the union's largest B.C. loca, said the combination of Pierre Trudeau in Ottawa and the Socreds in Victoria leaves "working people in this province in the worst period of their lives."

Senator Ed Lawson, leader of the Teamsters' Union, said the LRB has been a contributor to labor stability in the province and "I would make an earnest appeal to Bill Bennett not to tamper with it."

He said it is "battle stations ahead" if the labor record of the previous Social Credit administration is an indicator.

George Johnston, president of the 225,000-member B.C. Federation of Labor which contributed both money and staff to the NDP's campaign despite some differences with the government over its labor legislation, said the Social Credit administration "may introduce legislation we may have to resist."

Bennett and his government can expect opposition from the labor movement, Johnston said.

The B.C. Fed, which earlier had to deal with a split within its ranks over the NDP's back-to-work legislation, came together after the election call to work for the party, but suffered major defeats in the election which saw two of labor's strongest supporters lose out.

Colin Gablemann (North Vancouver-Seymour) and Harold Steves (Richmond), two of the government MLAs to speak out against the back-to-work legislation, were both defeated at the polls.

The union most affected by the change in government is the 35,000-member B.C. Government Employees Union, given bargaining rights and substantial pay increases by the NDP administration.

BCGEU leaders have refused comment on the NDP loss. Their union constitution forbids political partisianship.

Local IWA leader Roger Lewis said the labor movement is "in for a hell of a lot tougher time, with the Social Credit party backed by management."

He said labor would have to "play it by ear" but warned that the Socreds should be cautious in their dealings with labor.

Labor representatives gathered at the NDP headquarters in Victoria indulged in some speculation on just who the new Socred labor minister would be.

Speculation leaned towards ex-Liberal Allan Williams, but someone jokingly suggested Victoria Socred Sam Bawlf — "He knows as much about the working man as any of those guys."

In Some Circles They Call Her Amazing Grace . . .

VANCOUVER (CP)—Flame-haired and hard-nosed Grace McCarthy receives much of the credit for Social Credit's renewed popularity.

Mrs. McCarthy, 48, operator of a florist shop, spent hours during a two-year term as party president to put membership at more than 60,000.

She stepped down as president just a few days before Premier Dave Barrett called Thursday's general election.

Some people said that under her control, party membership mushroomed out of leader Bill Bennett's control, thus allowing some stacked nomination meetings.

"Think what you like, but anyone who can pull 50,000 people into a political party has done a fantastic job," a party official said at the fall convention in Vancouver.

The NDP membership is about 14,000.

Mrs. McCarthy, who won couverLittle Mountain riding couverLittle Mountain riding that she represented for two terms before 1972, describes herself as middle-of-the-road.

"I honestly don't think of myself as being far-right," she said at a meeting a year ago. "I am unabashedly free enterprise."

She was able to move the party into new headquarters in downtown Vancouver and it was under her presidency that the unity slogan was adopted.

She is said to be exceptionally loyal to the Bennett family, especially to Bill's father, W. A. C. Bennett, who had made her a cabinet minister in 1966. She was one of three women elevated to minister without portfolio.

After the 1972 debacle, which saw Mrs. McCarthy and fellow cabinet minister Leslie Peterson defeated by Roy Cummings and Phyllis Young in Vancouver-Little Mountain, the elder Bennett retained her and former municipal affairs minister Dan Campbell as executive assistants until he stepped down as leader in 1973.

She and her husband, Ray, whom she married in 1948, have two children.

One of the stories told about Mrs. McCarthy is that she was stopped this fall by the police for making a wrong turn.

After criticizing the NDP-instituted point system for driver's licence demerits, she found the policeman sympathetic, and promptly sold him a membership.

We'll Bounce Back NDP Losers Claim

Canadian Press

Spokesmen for the New Democratic Party, which was defeated at the polls in Thursday's provincial election, said today the party will bounce back during the next three years.

Economic Development Minister Gary Lauk, who retained his seat in Vancouver Centre, said the party had lost a battle but that a new battle will begin immediately.

"We have the same strong spirit, the same dedication that we've always had," he said in an interview.

He said his party was defeated as a result of big business ganging up with Social Credit.

Health Minister Dennis Cocke, who also won re-election in New Westminster, said he was terribly disappointed with the election results. The NDP government had produced programs which he felt warranted support.

He described Premier Dave Barrett, who went down to personal defeat, as "bar none, the finest political leader in Canada."

Human Resources Minister Sam Levi, who lost in Vancouver-Burrard, said a program of polarization began immediately after the NDP victory of 1972.

He said one of the major problems of the campaign was that "we were not able to understand the large undecided vote; there was just nothing there to read."

Provincial Secretary Ernie Hall, defeated in Surrey by former mayor Bill Vander Zalm, said he felt he had run a strong campaign.

"I've learned to realize in politics there are winners and losers," he said.

Mr. Hall said he would take a holiday "and re-introduce myself to my two children. Then I'll start looking for a job on Jan. 1.

Attorney-General Alex Macdonald, re-elected in Vancouver-East, said there was a coalition working against the NDP and the result would have been the same had the election been held next year.

"The things we stood for will ensure that we will produce a victory in the next election," he said.

ONLY SIX WOMEN IN NEW HOUSE

Canadian Press

Despite the Social Credit sweep, only two women will sit on the government side in British Columbia's 31st legislature, Grace McCarthy from Vancouver-Little Mountain and Pat Jordan who won re-election in Okanagan North.

The New Democrats lost Consumer Services Minister Phyllis Young in Vancouver-Little Mountain, a two-member riding, but Education Minister Eileen Dailly had a six-vote edge in Burnaby North.

Karen Sanford, chairman of the NDP caucus, Rosemary Brown, and Barbara Wallace were successful as NDP candidates.

50% Cabinet Down to Defeat

Canadian Press

Half of the 18-member New Democratic Party cabinet, including Premier Barrett, went down to personal defeat Thursday.

All but two of those defeated were in the Greater Vancouver area.

Barrett saw his 12,000-plus major[illegible]y of 1972 turn into a narrow election-night defeat at the hands of George Kerster in Coquitlam.

In nearby Burnaby-Willingdon, Municipal Affairs Minister James Lorimer was defeated by Social Crediter Elwood Veitch and in another nearby seat, Provincial Secretary Ernie Hall saw a 9,000 margin in 1972 become a 2,300-deficit in Surrey to retiring Mayor Bill Vander Zalm.

Transport minister Carl Liden, a newcomer to the cabinet, lost in Delta, and Norm Levi, much criticized for a $100 million overrun in his Human Resources department a year ago, lost in Vancouver Burrard.

His running mate, Rosemary Brown who finished second to Ed Broadbent in the Easter national NDP leadership race, won re-election.

Consumer Services Minister Phyllis Young was defeated in Vancouver - Little Mountain, and Recreation and Conservation Minister Jack Radford went down to defeat in Vancouver South.

The two from outside the Lower Mainland who lost were Alf Nunweiler, minister without portfolion in charge of northern affairs, loser to Howard Lloyd, a wealthy contractor, in Fort George, and Public Works Minister Bill Hartley who lost to Tom Waterland of the Social Credit in Yale-Lillooet.

One of those re-elected was Education Minister Eileen Dailly, who also was deputy premier. She won by six votes in Burnaby North.

Also re-elected were Attorney-General Alex MacDonald and Resources Minister Bob Williams in Vancouver East, Highways Minister Graham Lea in Prince Rupert, Housing Minister Lorne Nicolson in Nelson-Creston, Gary Lauk, holder of the portfolios of mining and of economic development, who was re-elected in Vancouver Centre, Labor Minister Bill King in Revelstoke-Slocan, Health Minister Dennis Cocke in New Westminster and Dave Stupich, minister of finance and of agriculture, in Nanaimo.

Also defeated was Gordon Dowding, Speaker in the last legislature, who lost in Burnaby-Edmonds, and Hartley Dent, the deputy speaker who lost in Skeena.

It's George The Giant-Killer

By The Canadian Press

George Kerster, a car dealer who did not entered politics until after Nov. 3—when the British Columbia provincial election was called, upset Premier Dave Barrett in his home riding Thursday.

Mr. Kerster, a Social Credit candidate, defeated the premier by 167 votes in the closely-contested Coquitlam riding. A recount is expected.

"I expected it would be close," Mr. Kerster said in an interview. "But with the amount of effort we put into it, we had to win.

He said he could not estimate how much his campaign had cost. "That's a very good question. I'll have to sit down to have a look at that question."

Mr. Kerster, 38, said communications in government was one of the reasons the premier lost.

"Coquitlam wants an MLA who isn't tied up with other responsibilities . . . who keeps in touch with his own people. We Socreds promised more people input into government, not more government input into people."

3rd Vote Looming In City

Victoria voters face the prospect of their third election in less than three months, with the victory in Thursday's provincial election of city alderman and Social Credit candidate Sam Bawlf.

Although he had indicated earlier he would resign his city council seat if elected an MLA, Bawlf said today he won't do so until he has had an opportunity to consult with mayor-elect Mike Young.

Bawlf said out of consideration for Young, during the interregnum period before the 1976 council takes up the reins, he feels he should find out "what would be convenient as far as he's concerned" before he resigns his aldermanic seat.

When he does step down, a byelection would have to be held not less than 30 days and not more than 45 days after the resignation, making the earliest likely date around the third week in January.

John Hayes, an appraiser who was the highest runner-up in November's civic election, had announced four weeks ago that he would be a contender in the byelection if Bawlf was elected to the legislature.

Bawlf pointed out that as Socreds will fill only three of the nine Vancouver Island seats — his successful party colleagues were Hugh Curtis in Saanich-Islands and Lyle Kahl in Esquimalt — he will have to cover a lot of territory in attending to problems of other constituencies.

PARTY SWITCH PAID OFF FOR THE SIX

Times News Services

VANCOUVER — Six party-switchers were among successful Socred candidates Thursday.

Four former Liberals, three from the provincial sphere and one from the federal, as well as one ex-Conservative and Frank Calder who left the NDP during the campaign, were all elected.

Five were sitting MLAs in the last House and the other, former federal fisheries minister Jack Davis had been out of politics since his defeat as a Liberal in the 1974 federal election.

Dr. Pat McGeer and Garde Gardom, who left the Liberal Party to join the Socreds, retained their seats in the riding of Vancouver-Point Grey by a handy margin over Setty Pendakur and Hilda Thomas of the NDP.

Another former Liberal, Allan Williams won re-election in West Vancouver-Howe Sound with a smashing victory over Murray Miller of the NDP.

All three were severely criticized by Liberal leader Gordon Gibson, who won personal re-election in North Vancouver-Capilano. Gibson defeated North Vancouver Mayor Ron Andrews, running for the Socreds.

Calder, a Nishga Indian leader in northern B.C., was fired by Barrett in July, 1973, and joined the Socreds just over a month ago. Barrett accused Calder, known as the Little Chief of B.C. politics, of not informing him about an incident in his personal life.

The final party switcher who made it was Hugh Curtis in the riding of Saanich and the Islands. Curtis left the Progressive Conservatives to join the Socreds and retained his seat easily over the challenge of NDP's Carol Pickup.

Tidal Wave: Gibson

NORTH VANCOUVER (CP) — Liberal leader Gordon Gibson said that Thursday's electin was "the tidal wave sweeping over B.C."

Gibson, who was re-elected in North Vancouver-Capilano, had been predicting a minority government situation with the Liberals holding the balance of power.

Gibson was the only Liberal elected. The party elected five MLAs in the 1972 election, but three members left the party to sit as independents during the spring session of the legislature, then joined the Social Credit party in September. The three were re-elected Thursday.

"Some day the people of this province are going to find it to their advantage to stop in the centre of these swings and the Liberal party is going to be around for that day," Gibson said.

Gibson expressed "great sorrow" at the defeat in Victoria of former Liberal leader David Anderson.

"He was a first class MLA and the house will be poorer without him," said Gibson.

Gibson was first elected for the legislature in a byelection Feb. 5, 1974 in which he beat Ron Andrews of Social Credit by a margin of 37 votes. Gibson beat Andrews by 290 votes in results Thursday.

"The increase in my margin tonight sounds like about 700 per cent which in the face of the tidal wave sweeping the province is very gratifying," Gibson said as returns came in.

He told supporters that the Liberal party may have come out of the election with fewer seats but that it has emerged as a "stronger and healthier" party from a philosophical point of view.

He said the Liberal philosophy during the campaign had grown closer to the basic needs of the electorate than it had been for some time in the past.

Gibson would not say whether he was surprised by the strong Social Credit margin.

"The election could have gone either way," he said.

One Box Holds Key

Every ballot box except one in Victoria constituency was opened and counted Thursday night. But someone inadvertently locked the key into the final ballot box. The box was opened today in the presence of scrutineers.

Ethylene Plant Gets Nod

CALGARY (CP) — The Alberta energy resources conservation board has recommended that cabinet approve a $1.5-billion petrochemical project headed by Alberta Gas Ethylene Co. Ltd. AGE of Calgary.

The board said it is prepared to grant industrial development permits — subject to cabinet approval — to AGE and other participants in the project, including Dow Chemical of Canada Ltd. of Sarnia, Ont., Du Pont of Canada Ltd. of Montreal and Canadian Industries Ltd. CIL of Montreal.

The proposed project, as before the board, was to consist of a central ethylene plant by AGE at Red Deer to produce 1.2 billion pounds of ethylene a year; and plants by Dow, Du Pont and CIL at Fort Saskatchewan, Blackfalds and Redwater to produce vinyl chloride monomer, high-density polyethylene and low density polyethylene respectively, using the AGE ethylene as feedstock.

But price uncertainities, timing of the project and the Alberta government's decison not to subsidize prices of natural gas used by the participants led to recent announcements by Du Pont and CIL.

Du Pont said it is suspending its plans for at least five years because it has been unable to obtain favorable prices for the necessary ethylene feedstock. CIL said it is still "interested" in participation but its plans have been delayed to late 1979 or 1980.

In the meantime. Dow has picked up the entire proposed ethylene production by AGE — 700 million pounds for its plants in Alberta and 500 million pounds for possible export to the United States. The latter proposal is subject to approval by the National Energy Board.

AGE, a subsidiary of Alberta Gas Trunk Line Co. Ltd., Alberta's principal gas transmission company, and Dow were original competitors for ethylene projects. Dow decieed to cancel its own ethylene project and join AGE after the Alberta government indicated support for the AGE project.

In recommending cabinet approval of the project, the energy board noted that in the 20 years ending 1998 — the terms requested by the applicants — it would provide total benefits in excess of $15 billion to Alberta in additon to increased employment opportunites.

AGE, Dow, Du Pont and CIL, in their applications, requested permission to use annually 3.9 billion cubic feet, 2.5 billion cubic feet, 2.76 billion cubic feet and 1.4 billion cubic feet of gas as feedstock, respectively. AGE alone also asked to use 14 million barrels of ethane as feedstock.

The board recommended approval of requirements as requested by AGE and CIL an increased the limits of annual gas use by Dow to 2.9 billion cubic feet and by Du Pont to 2.8 billion cubic feet.

Same Price Urged for Cars

By PAUL WHITELAW
Times Washington Bureau

DETROIT — The Big Four automakers should be forced to stop charging Canadian consumers higher prices than Americans for virtually identical cars, the influential United Auto Workers union told a U.S. government investigation here Thursday.

"The UAW believes there is no justification for the continuation of this Canadian price differential," said union presidential Leonard Woodcock.

He urged the U.S. and Canadian governments "to take whatever steps are necessary" to prevent manufacturers from charging an average 6.5 per cent more — before taxes — for their cars in Canada.

Woodcock was testifying before the International Trade Commission, a U.S. government-fact-finding body investigating the Canada-U.S. Auto Trade Agreement.

At the request of the U.S. Senate Finance committee, the ITC is preparing a report on the impact of the 10-year-old treaty on trade, investment, employment and auto production in the two countries.

It is expected to be made public early in 1976.

If critical of the auto pact the report will provide ammunition for protectionist senators and congressmen who would like to see the agreement renegotiated with new provisions — more favorable to the United States.

Woodcock's call for government action to force lower prices in Canada for North American-assembled cars was sharply rebutted by a senior American auto executive.

"It's not a problem of Canadian prices being too high. It's a case of U.S. prices being too low," testified A. N. O'Keefe, assistant comptroller of Chrysler Corporation.

He said U.S. price controls, in effect from 1971 until early last year, prevented auto makers from passing through normal increases.

Prices in the U.S. should rise closer to the Canadian level, O'Keefe stated but this had to be done gradually — particularly because of the current depressed car market.

The Chrysler executive and other spokesmen for the U.S. auto industry pointed out to the ITC that the price differential between Canada and the U.S. had dropped during the life of the auto pact from more than 15 per cent to less than six per cent.

Rejecting Woodcock's claim that higher prices in Canada were "artificially fixed," they said doing business in Canada is more expensive.

Atlantic Search For Freighter

CAPE HATTERAS (UPI) — U.S. Coast Guard and navy ships and planes searched the "graveyard of the Atlantic" today for 10 missing crewmembers of a Liberian freighter that sank four minutes after a hatch ruptured Thursday.

Fourteen other crewmen were rescued from the seas 90 miles east-southeast of Cape Hatteras.

The duty officer at the coast guard air station at Elizabeth City, N.C., said the rescued men included the captain of the 351-foot motor vessel Drosia, which carried a crew of 24 men.

Three navy ships, a coast guard cutter, two C-130 planes and two coast guard helicopters searched the waters off North Carolina's famed outer banks for the missing crewmen.

The area is known in sealore as the "graveyard of the Atlantic" because of the number of ships that have sunk in its waters.

The coast guard said the Drosia, carrying a cargo of sugar, sank around 4 a.m., Thursday, after a hatch ruptured.

"The master of the vessel said the ruptured hatch caused flooding or did some other damage to the ship and caused it to sink in about four minutes," the coast guard said.

The coast guard said 13 crewmen in a raft were picked up by the USS Hayes and another crewman in a small boat was rescued by a coast guard helicopter.

Garbage Strike Over

NEW YORK (AP) — Members of a Teamsters local and representatives of private garbage-carting firms reached tentative agreement on a contract today, ending a garbage strike that had entered its 11th day and left thousands of tons of garbage piled on city streets and rooftops.

Bernard Adelstein, head of Teamsters Local 813, announced that after a close vote his 2,000 men have accepted a three-year pact that offers wage increases of $15 a week the first year and $13 a week in each of the last two years. He said the garbagemen will report to work today.

Adelstein said management has also offered $5 for the workers' pension plan and $1 a week more in severance.

Adelstein figured the total package, including fringe benefits, as a $27-a-week increase for each worker.

FULL NEW YORK AID BILL SUCCESS

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Brushing aside suggestions for a token, symbolic cut, House-Senate conferees have agreed on a bill providing the full $2.3 billion loan New York City says it needs to stay solvent.

Enactment is expected next week despite a last-ditch stand by opponents.

Sitting around a long, felt-covered table, senior members of the House and Senate appropriations committees toyed with the idea Thursday of cutting the appropriation just to demonstrate congressional distaste for helping cities that spend themselves into trouble.

House appropriations chairman George Mahon said a cut would show the committees were not rubber stamps.

"From a standpoint of imagery, it might be desirable," he said.

But Sen. William Proxmire and other proponents talked him out of it.

"If we shave it, I think we're asking for trouble," Proxmire said.

"I'm not going to be an obstructionist," Mahon said, relenting.

Rep. Robert Bauman, however, said when the matter reaches the house for final approval early next week, possibly Tuesday, he intends to try — one last time — to kill or reduce the aid program to keep New York City solvent.

Bauman said he would move to send the $10.3 billion catchall, end-of-year appropriation back to the conferees with instructions to cut the New York money.

Despite the narrowness of the 213-203 vote by which the House authorized the loans last week, Bauman's effort was given little chance of success.

Meantime, in Albany, Gov. Hugh Carey still worried about possible default on Monday of the state's housing finance agency, announced the layoff of 7,000 state workers as an economy measure.

Carey said bankers sought a commitment from the legislature to increase state taxes by $805 million before agreeing to loans that would prevent the default.

$500 Fine for Possession of Pot

A 26-year-old former Victoria man was sentenced Thursday in county court to a nominal one day in jail and fined $500 for possession of marijuana.

Donald Lewis Walper, formerly of 3709 Blenkinsop and now living in Saskatoon, was originally charged with possession of marijuana for the purpose of trafficking but Crown counsel Mike Hutchison told Judge L. F. Cashman he accepted the guilty plea to the lesser offence of possession.

Hutchison said police found four one-pound bags of marijuana Oct. 22, 1974, in Walper's bedroom at the Blenkinsop Road house where he was a boarder. There was no criminal record and Walper had been living in Saskatoon since late May and returned voluntarily to appear in court.

Defence counsel R. T. Johnston said a friend of Walper's asked him if he could leave the marijuana bags at his place for a short time and Walper agreed, "essentially allowing his room to be used for storage."

New Stamp Issue

OTTAWA (CP) — The post office has announced it will issue 31 stamps in 1976 including five in an Olympic Games series. Among the other stamps to be issued are one marking the American bicentennial and another commemorating the centenary of Royal Military College, Kingston, Ont. The Indians of Canada series will be concluded Sept. 17 with an issue of four stamps honoring the Iroquois.

Blood Collection Cost Heading for $30

It's a proud tradition in Canada that blood is donated free, and given free to those who need it in hospital — but collecting it is costly and getting costlier.

Gerry Savage, Red Cross spokesman in Greater Victoria, says the cost of collecting a unit of blood is expected to climb to $30 next year. The cost per unit was $18 to $20 this year, in contrast to $10.70 in 1973.

The cost of everything, from the plastic bags the blood is kept in to testing blood for hepatitis, has been climbing, he says.

One solution to trimming costs is fewer clinics with larger numbers of donors at each because some clinic costs are fixed, regardless of the number who show up. Donors at clinics this month and early in the new year will be asked their opinions on trimming hours of clinics, Savage said.

The Red Cross will operate clinics daily next week in its drive to match for the first time in recent years the total blood donated to blood used by local hospitals.

Clinics Monday and Tuesday will be at Red Cross House, 1046 Fort, from 2:30 to 4:30 and 6:30 to 9 p.m. Monday and 1:30 to 4:30 and 6:30 to 9 p.m. Tuesday.

Wednesday's clinics will be in the gymnasium at Canadian Forces Base, Esquimalt, from 9 a.m. to noon and 1:15 to 4 p.m.

Thursday and Friday clinics will be at Newcombe Auditorium in Provincial Museum, from 9 to noon and 1:15 to 4:30 p.m.

Jaguar Killed Seven

BUENAVENTURA, Colombia (UPI) — Police today reported a ranch hand killed a six-foot, 200-pound jaguar that had devoured an entire seven-member family, 50 cattle, and several dogs and cats.

Police in Cisneros on Colombia's Pacific coast said over the past two years the jaguar had killed "the Martinez family," consisting of seven persons as well as the cows and domestic animals.

Jose Antonio Torres, a ranch employee, staked out the jaguar earlier this week and killed him with a single shot from a 12-gauge shotgun, authorities said.

The body of the jaguar was taken to a taxidermist for preservation in a museum.

15 YEARS FOR MANSLAUGHTER

VANCOUVER (CP) — Leonard Ernest Laforge, 24, of Vancouver was sentenced Thursday to 15 years for manslaughter in the fatal stabbing May 31 of Bradley Ellis Orr, 25.

Laforge had claimed he acted in self defence after Orr made a homosexual suggestion and threatened him with a bayonet.

Mr. Justice James Macdonald said: "The jury did not believe you acted in self defence."

"There was not a mark of injury on your body," the judge told Laforge. "You killed Orr in the most merciless and vicious way."

Orr was stabbed 11 times with a bayonet.

The judge said most of the blows went through Orr's body and were struck when he was defenceless on the floor. Both men had been drinking but the judge said alcohol was no excuse.

'Floating Sweat Shops' Condemned by Union Man

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada should not permit the use of "floating foreign sweat shops" in its coastal waters in order to keep shipping costs down for industry, the Commons Transport Committee was told Thursday.

"You wouldn't believe what happens on some of those ships," said Don Nicholson, national vice-president of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Transport and General Workers.

He was referring to ships flying "flags of convenience" which pick up crews in various ports throughout the world, pay only subsistence wages and offer miserable working conditions.

He said his union, which represents about 6,000 seamen working on ferries, tugboats and docks sometimes boycotts such ships. In other cases, the union has had the ships impounded in Canadian waters when it's owner is known to have committed a specific offence, he said.

He urged the committee, which is studying a proposed maritime code to replace the Canada Shipping Act, to make it possible for labor inspectors to board these ships and enforce labor regulations.

Nicholson's remarks were in response to questions from Conservative Fred McCain, who represents the New Brunswick riding of Carleton-Charlotte.

McCain said he was concerned that proposals in the code which would eventually restrict most coastal shipping to Canadian flag ships, might result in increased shipping costs.

The Seafarer's International Union (SIU), which also appeared before the committee, said closing Canadian coastal shipping to all but Canadian ships with Canadian crews would create about 2,400 jobs.

SIU President Roman Gralewicz said he understood the problem raised by McCain but said Canadian seamen should not be expected to subsidize coastal industries.

"Why don't we bring in a bunch of Chinamen to work on the railroads for nothing?" he asked. "We can't compete with labor in Singapore."

The SIU has urged the federal government to establish a deep-sea merchant marine as well as a coastal merchant fleet and in return has promised a 10-year, no-strike contract, providing disputes by its 7,200 members are submitted to binding arbitration by an independent board.

Kenyan Amnesty

NAIROBI, Kenya (UPI) — President Jomo Kenyatta granted an amnesty Thursday to 10,000 prisoners to mark the 12th anniversary of Kenya's independence from Britain.

b.c. briefs

VANCOUVER (CP) — Mr. Justice J. C. Bouck Thursday set bail at $3,000 for Roy Armstrong Lowther, charged with murder punishable by life imprisonment in the death of his wife, poet Pat Lowther.

Bail was opposed by F. A. Melvin, acting for the Crown, who claimed that it was in the public interest for Lowther to be detained.

Lowther is charged with the murder of his wife, believed to have occurred between Sept. 22 and Oct. 14 this year.

Mrs. Lowther's bludgeoned body was found Oct. 16 at the mouth of a creek near Britannia Beach, 25 miles north of Vancouver, on Howe Sound.

Mr. Justice Bouck said he had been told the preliminary hearing would be held Dec. 15, but a trial would probably not take place until March or April next year if there was a committal.

He said he did not believe it was in the public interest that Lowther be detained and set bail on the following terms:

—Lowther was to enter into a cognizance in the amount of $3,000 and one surety was to be provided in that amount,

—Lowther must report every two weeks to the bail supervisor and surrender to the Crown any passport he may have until the present charge is no longer outstanding;

—Lowther must also remain within the boundaries of British Columbia unless otherwise ordered by the court.

VANCOUVER (CP) — A Canadian National Railways spokesman said Thursday that a new rock slide Wednesday evening has indefinitely delayed the re-opening of the CNR mainline.

The line has been closed in the Fraser Canyon 80 miles west of here for more than a week, after heavy rains caused a series of mud and rock slides.

Freight traffic has been moving over CP Rail and British Columbia Rail lines since the blockage. Passenger traffic west of Kamloops has been moving by bus.

VANCOUVER (CP) — A Dec. 2 political forum at teh Pacific National Exhibition raised $445.79 which will be donated to the United Way, a forum organizer said Thursday. The profit came from a controversial $1 admission charge to hear the four leaders speak on the "moral and ethical implications" of Thursday's election.

VANCOUVER (CP) — Traffic closures will resume on the Lions Gate Bridge over Burrard Inlet next week to complete jobs connected with last summer's resurfacing project. The bridge will be closed from 11:30 p.m. to 6 a.m. on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, a highways department spokesman said Thursday.

Gov't Sued for $69M

VANCOUVER (CP) — A man who claims the British Columbia government interfered with his rights to a mineral property is suing the government for $69 million.

In a writ filed with the Supreme Court of B.C., Ken Morris claims "that the defendants (the government) did maliciously interfere with the rights acquired pursuant to the Mineral Act."

The claims centre on a reef of jade, which Morris said is some of the best ever found in the province, located in the watershed to the Stein River, west of Lytton on the Fraser River.

The government imposed a two-year ban on claim-staking in the area in February, 1974.

Morris says that because of the ban, potential buyers of the property backed away from the deal.

He claims the sale price was to have been $500,000 in cash and $500,000 a year for 45 years.

The total of this multiplied times three is the amount of the claim, he said Tuesday, when he filed the writ he is claiming that amount because the government had malicious intent in cutting off the possibility of developing the property.

Spanish Court Frees Communist Camacho

MADRID (UPI) — Spain's political court today freed Marcelino Camacho, a 57-year-old Communist labor leader released two weeks ago under a royal pardon and then rearrested.

Camacho had been charged with leading a massive left-wing demonstration, but the judge of Public Order Court No. 2 released Camacho and dropped charges.

The release came as thousands of persons continued their wildcat strikes for reform, and as a new reform-minded interior minister, Manuel Fraga Iribarne, emerged with considerable power in the first cabinet of the post Franco-era.

Camacho's wife Josefina and his lawyer, Christian Democrat leader Joaquin Ruiz-Gimenez, were present at Madrid's central courthouse for the release.

The metal worker had testified Wednesday before the public order court, but was still being held in the jail cells of the courthouse.

Ruiz-Gimenez went to the courthouse carrying the judge's ruling to drop charges against Camacho.

When Camacho was released from Carabanchel prison 12 days ago under a limited pardon by King Juan Carlos I, he vowed to continue the struggle to gain freedom for all 2,000 of Spain's political prisoners. The king's pardon freed 236 persons.

Police said that when they rearrested Camacho Sunday he was directing a pro-amnesty demonstration outside the prison near his suburban home.

Camacho's sister Vicenta said police detained him when he left his home briefly to buy the morning newspapers.

Ruiz-Gimenez had asked Juan Carlos to personally intervene to obtain Camacho's new release.

Arias, himself a holdover from the regime of Generalissimo Francisco Franco, replaced all but three members of his 19-man cabinet. It was one of the most sweeping government changes in recent Spanish history.

U.K. GOV'T, MDs AGREE ON WAGES

LONDON (AP) — Leaders of Britain's junior hospital doctors and the Labor government agreed early today on a wage formula that may result in resumption of normal hospital operations after a slowdown that began two weeks ago.

The doctors will meet Monday at hospitals around the country to study the proposals. If a majority favors accepting them, the hospitals might be working normally as early as Tuesday, medical officials said.

Meanwhile, the doctors agreed to restore full emergency service in all areas.

Both sides want to avoid a repeat of the case of Seema Bhola, a five-month-old Indian girl who died Tuesday while an ambulance team went from hospital to hospital seeking to have her admitted.

Details of the proposed settlement were not made public immediately, but indications were that the doctors were promised much of what they sought.

Employment Minister Michael Foot, who negotiated with the medical men, said it does not violate the government's anti-inflation ceiling for wage increases.

Military Fading In Lisbon

Politicians called both developments a major victory for Portugal's non-Communist parties.

Azevedo, himself a navy admiral, made his move just hours after the military's policy-making Revolutionary Council called for urgent talks aimed at giving civilians a greater voice in government.

"Conversations with the political parties should be initiated in the shortest possible time to immediately revise the . . . agreement signed between the Armed Forces Movement and the (political) parties," a council statement said.

Under the eight-month-old pact, political parties gave the revolutionary council ultimate legislative and executive powers for the next three-to-five years.

The council decision to negotiate a reduction of power represented a major victory for the socialist and left-of-centre popular democratic parties who have demanded such a move since a left-wing military revolt failed 17 days ago.

Portugal's armed forces have ruled since the bloodless coup April 25, 1974 that ended half a century of dictatorship.

The two parties also stood to gain in a cabinet shuffle. Azevedo has indicated a Socialist would replace Industry Minister Luis Marques Do Carmo, a leftist who resigned shortly before the uprising.

Azevedo also indicated the Popular Democrats would replace Social Affairs Minister Jorge Sa Borges, who resigned from the party in an internal split earlier this week.

PM Aware Many Young People Jobless

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau declared Thursday that the government will try not to cut expenditures in a way which would worsen the unemployment rate among young people in Canada.

He said in the Commons that the government is trying to decide whether to cut the Opportunities for Youth program and Company of Young Canadians to replace them with alternative employment schemes for young Canadians, or to add new programs to OFY and CYC.

David MacDonald (PC-Egmont) referred to reports that the government is considering abolition of the two existing programs and noted that some 317,000 young people are unemployed this month in Canada.

Trudeau replied that the government is conscious of two dangers — inflation and high unemployment — and is doing its best to meet the demand in the country to cut expenditures.

"But in doing so we will do our best to make sure not to cut them in such a way as to affect the unemployment situation adversly," he added.

The prime minister said that the difficulty in dealing with employment needs for young Canadians is in avoiding expenditure increases at undesirable rates.

Trudeau's views were backed by Treasury Board President Jean Chretien, who said Thursday it is inevitable that some federal programs will be cut as the government tries to slow its rate of spending.

Chretien told reporters nothing is untouchable although the government must focus attention on programs that account for about 30 per cent of federal spending.

Federal expenditures in the year ending March 31, 1976, will be about $31.3 billion.

"We can't ask every segment of society for restraint and not do likewise," he said outside the Commons.

The government will not fire public servants, Chretien said, but increases in federal staff will be kept to a growth rate of 1.5 per cent.

Chretien said the government hopes this year to have its expenditures increase down by 15 per cent, as opposed to about 24 per cent last year.

But he said there were some programs, such as old-age security, which cannot be reduced. Such programs total nearly 70 per cent of federal spending.

Pulp Men Optimistic On Guides

By MARGARET PITON
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Henri Lorraine, head of the Canadian Paperworkers Union said yesterday Labour Minister John Munro is still sympathetic to his union's request for a settlement above the anti-inflation guidelines. More than 25,000 pulp and paper workers are on strike in Canada.

A spokesman for Munro confirmed that in a meeting with Lorraine yesterday the minister reiterated his position that in the pulp and paper industry the guidelines could be applied flexibly.

"Munro still says that the industry has been hiding behind the guidelines," Lorraine said at a press conference.

"We're hoping the Anti-Inflation Board won't forget the flexibility in the guidelines," he said.

He noted that the pulp and paper workers could be exempted from rigid application of the guidelines on the basis that their previous contract was signed before 1974 and also on the basis of their historical relationship with the Ontario woodlands workers, who earlier won an increase to $5.91 per hour, compared to the $4.82 base rate for inside workers.

The Anti-Inflation Board is now considering a recent settlement at Irving Pulp and Paper in Saint John, N.B. which gave the inside workers a 21 per cent base rate increase, and is expected to rule on the settlement today.

Lorraine said he has been asked by the labor minister to return to the bargaining table to settle non-monetary issues, and "we're ready to start talking again."

He also said the union has evidence that the tough industry bargaining position may be softening.

"There have always been two camps in the cartel—the hawks led by Abitibi Paper Company and the others who are more humane," Lorraine noted.

At the St. Ann Nackawic Paper Company in New Brunswick, the compahy president has offered to lend any striker up to $50 per week, he said, in order to retain workers.

Lorraine said he was "surprised" by the Anti-Inflation Board's ruling in the postal settlement, and didn't know how it would affect their decision in the pulp industry.

If the Board rules against the Irving settlement, "We'll appeal the decision," he noted.

Housing Aid Passed

OTTAWA (CP) — Under pressure from Urban Affairs Minister Barney Danson, the Commons welfare committee approved a new housing bill at a late night sitting Thursday.

The bill, which would broaden the government's assisted home ownership program (AHOP) and increase payments to some builders of rental units is expected to return to the Commons for final approval sometime next week.

After three esessions on the bill Thursday, the committee was going to adjourn until Monday. But Mr. Danson said that would mean the Commons would not be able to consider the bill again before the Christmas recess late next week.

"That would mean probably a delay until the middle of January," he said. "By that time, builders and lenders and provinces are in limbo and the building season is held up another month."

The committee reconsidered and approved the bill after more discussion at the late night sitting.

Earlier, John Gilbert, New Democratic housing critic, said tenants in some federally-subsidized rented houses will be losing some government protection under new federal legislation.

Gilbert Toronto Broadview told the Commons welfare committee Thursday that the housing bill removes federal control on rents in individual apartment units.

The government was giving loans to builders at subsidized interest rates but the tenant was getting nothing, he said.

Danson said tenants would suffer more if there were not enough new, moderate-cost apartment units built.

Agreements with builders of new rental housing would require them to prove the increased costs they are claiming are legitimate before moderate rent increases are permitted, he said.

Oil Price Raises Probed

OTTAWA (CP) — Federal and provincial energy ministers meet today in the first of a series of conferences on how much oil and natural gas prices should be raised next year.

Exactly how much won't be discussed until early in the new year, Energy Minister Alastair Gillespie said Thursday.

The governments would have to first sort out a method of implementing the increases in the wake of price freezes by some provinces this year.

Ottawa says the freezes disrupted its policy of a national one-price system but Gillespie said he expects no changes until the current agreement runs out on June 30.

A report released last month forecast that oil reserves are dropping and exports to the United States will have to be eliminated by the end of 1981. Last year it estimated the exports could continue until 1983.

The combination of growing imports, high world oil prices and cuts in exports are forcing government to increase the domestic price, currently $3.51 a barrel below the world price of $11.51.

Under its policy of freezing the domestic price at $8 a barrel, the federal government levies an export tax on oil shipped to the United States.

The mountain grape.

In the last 10 years, from the vineyards of California and B.C.'s Okanagan Valley, a new kind of wine has established itself among the great wine classifications of the world.

The Mountain wine. Mountain wines are made with grapes grown in upland or hillside vineyards. And while the mountain grape may not grow as prolifically as its cousin grown on the flat valley floor, it compensates by producing a distinctive and finer wine.

At Calona, two of our mountain wines are Mountain White and Mountain Red. Both are made with grapes grown on the upper slopes of our Okanagan Valley vineyards. Wine from these grapes is aged to maturity, then blended to provide wines of great character.

Mountain Red is light in colour and body with a very soft character. An extremely pleasant wine, Mountain White is a quite dry, medium body wine, light in colour, subtle and mellow to the palate. Try a glass of one of our Mountain Wines and see for yourself the difference the mountain grape makes.

Mountain Red. Mountain White. From Calona Wines.

More French Hinted

OTTAWA (CP) — Broader use of French in Quebec airspace may be permitted soon, Transport Minister Otto Lang said Thursday.

Lang said in a statement he expects a report before the end of the month on use of French in ground communications with aircraft operating by instruments. These include commercial airliners.

If this report shows safety will not be affected by such a move, new procedures will be announced after further talks with air controllers and the aviation industry, the minister said.

At present, the government allows French and English to be used for aircraft under visual flight rules out of airports at Quebec City, St. Jean, Septiles, Baie Comeau and St. Honore. Visual flight rules apply generally to small aircraft and not commercial airliners.

Two French-speaking controllers were suspended for one day each this week for speaking French in the control tower at Dorval airport, Montreal which is not one of the areas where French is permitted.

Lang faced protests from Quebec Liberal and Social Credit members in the Commons Tuesday because of the suspensions.

Bill Robertson, vice-president of the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association, also said his group is protesting the suspension of an English-speaking controller at Dorval.

Robertson said the controller refused to work in his sector of the airport control tower because others members of the group spoke French and he did not understand what was going on.

The Canadian Air Line Pilots Association threatened a country-wide walkout of pilots in October if the government did not cancel the experiment at the five Quebec airports, but a court injunction obtained by Air Canada prevented the strike.

The pilots group says air safety is threatened when two languages are used in communications to aircraft in flight.

Theft Charge Laid

American authorities today returned Robert R. Zeilstra, 19, of 525 Johnson, to Victoria following discovery of a beached boat near Port Angeles Wednesday evening.

He was to have appeared on charges of impersonating a police officer and theft at today's sitting of provincial court, but court was told he was then en route by ferry from across Juan de Fuca Strait.

Oak Bay police said a man rented a boat Wednesday morning at Oak Bay Marina, along with some fishing gear. But the 12-foot outboard was found about a mile from Ediz Hook where it apparently had washed ashore.

American authorities were reported as having been told a man had stepped ashore and abandoned the boat. A suspect was picked up trying to hitchhike to Seattle.

Police here said a boat had been rented in the name of S. Austin, 1439 Carey, which was found to be false.

2 Women Elected Yukon Mayors

WHITEHORSE, Yukon (CP) — Two women emerged winners Thursday in mayoralty elections held in three municipalities in the Yukon.

In Whitehorse, juvenile court judge Ione Christensen was elected, defeating two male opponents. The judge, who becomes the first woman mayor in the history of Whitehorse, succeeds Pal Lucier, who resigned after being appointed first senator from the territory.

In Dawson City, the winner was Yolanda Burkhart, who defeated incumbent Colin Mayes. Burkhart was fired over a year ago from her post as city clerk.

Dutch Train Boobytrapped?

BEILEN (UPI) — Fanatical South Moluccan gunmen were reported today to have booby-trapped their hijacked train with explosives in a bid to keep Dutch marines from storming the stronghold and freeing their 26 hostages.

The Bible-carrying gunmen, who prayed and wept as they killed three captives in the sieze, seized the train and 75 hostages 11 days ago. They are battling to set up a republic in their spice islands homeland in the Pacific that is now ruled by Indonesia.

Dutch newspapers reported that one of the gunmen who surrendered when he wounded himself and two hostages in an explosion on the train told police the South Moluccans had rigged the train with bombs set to explode if any attempt is made to storm the train.

The lives of the remaining 26 hostages and any assault force would be endangered, he was quoted as saying.

The reports said the information from the captured gunman, identified only as "Paul S." and charged with first degree murder, convinced Prime Minister Joop Den Uyl to call off plans for 450 Dutch marines to take the train by force.

The Dutch government did not deny the reports. A spokesman said he was not commenting either way.

Mediators negotiating with gunmen are counting their victories in small ways. The release of two elderly hostages was the latest.

DRINKING BANNED IN ONLY 2 SPORTS

MONTREAL (UPI) — An information bureau for the 1976 summer Olympics, which provides little known facts about the games, came up with a dandy piece of trivia Thursday.

"Alcohol," a bureau release said, "is banned in only two summer Olympic sports — fencing and the pistol shooting event in the Modern Penthalon.

"It's felt that the relaxation induced by a couple of stiff belts (which would impede performance in other sports) might contribute to improved performance in swort and pistol play.

"It mght also contribute to a sore loser disputing his loss by plinking a referee or taking a pot-shot at a scorer . . ."

The same release revealed that an Australian swimmer set an unofficial record at the 1972 games in Munich when it took her 12 hours to produce a urine specimen for the Drug Control Tests.

Man Lost Overboard On Swartz Bay Run

An unsuccessful search by two helicopters and the Canadian coast guard cutter Rider failed to find a man who is believed to have gone over the side of the Queen of Esquimalt on Thursday.

A passenger reported seeing a man in the water near the vessel five minutes after it had left Tsawwassen on its 2 p.m. sailing. Items of male clothing were found on a life-jacket locker.

The ferry turned back to conduct a search but was released around 3 p.m. to continue its journey to Swartz Bay. The air and sea search was called off at nightfall.

Later, at about 4:15 p.m, the body of a man apparently between 55 and 60 years old was spotted just off Sidney Spit. A Sidney RCMP spokesman said this morning the body could not be that of the missing ferry passenger.

He said the body was discovered by the crew of a fishboat. But when an attempt was made to snare it the air leaked out of an air pocket in the ordinary jacket the man had been wearing, and the body sank.

A Mill Bay man was reported missing earlier in the week. Lloyd Aune, 59, was the lone occupant of a small boat which capsized about 100 feet from his waterfront home Monday afternoon.

$4,500 THEFT

Burglary and theft of $4,500 worth of old jewelery at Pegasus Antiques Ltd., 114 Langley, is being investigated by Victoria detectives.

The break-in occurred Wednesday night when entry to the building was gained by fire escape and a third floor window, allowing access to the second floor showroom where 29 articles of gold, silver, platinum and stones — mostly rings, brooches, necklaces and watches — were stolen.

Before The Judge

A 19-year-old youth charged in Victoria provincial court Thursday with failing to remain at the scene of an accident told Judge D. K. McAdam he didn't have a driver's licence because "so many of my friends were getting into accidents."

"I didn't want to drive at all," Steven Alexander Younger of 640 Dallas, said. "I had no desire to take the test."

Younger had been arrested early Thursday morning 20 minutes after police received a report of a car hitting a parked behicle on Dallas and then taking off.

The youth was also charged with taking a car without the owner's consent and not having a valid driver's licence. He pleaded guilty to all charges.

Despite defence counsel's plea to forego a fine because Younger was a welfare recipient, McAdam fined the youth a total of $125 to be paid at the rate of $25 a month. In addition, the judge banned Younger from driving in Canada for six months — with or without a driver's licence.

McCallum, an admitted alcoholic, had a previous conviction for theft last spring.

'Bitterness, Extremism' Ahead—Wallace

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

There's no reason to believe a Social Credit government will be any improvement over the NDP, Conservative leader Scott Wallace said Thursday night after winning personal re-election in Oak Bay.

"I predict the polarization in this province will force Social Credit into a position of bitterness and extremism which will be bad for British Columbia.

"I also predict Bill Bennett will have a difficult if not impossible task in trying to control that motley crew, that mish-mash, and the downfall of Social Credit will come from within.

"I predict the socialists likely will win the next election as a result of this polarization."

Wallace, who made the comments in an interview at party headquarters, chuckled that he sounded like Moses making prophecies.

In fact, he sounded more like the prophet Isaiah.

Moments before, he had made a triumphal entry to the cheers of more than 300 supporters, thanked them for their support, and then said British Columbians had made a terrible mistake by permitting the polarization to take place.

"I warned them. They didn't listen.

"Some idiot stated on the box (TV) tonight that there would never again be a socialist government in British Columbia. This result (the polarization) guarantees the return of a socialist government down the road."

Even before the polls closed, a crowd of 50 Wallace supporters had gathered at provincial party headquarters in the Scout Hall at 2561 Penrhyn, near Sinclair and Cadboro Bay Road.

By 8:30 p.m. there were 300 supporters on hand, all sensing a personal triumph for Wallace.

The issue was never in doubt. Conservative Party workers expected to get support in Oak Bay municipality but expected a strong Social credit showing in the Uplands and Gordon Head.

The first three polls were from Gordon Head and Wallace was in front. Knowledgeable party workers knew a Wallace victory was assured.

(Ironically, across Shelbourne street, voters were going for Social Credit candidate Hugh Curtis in a big way).

There the result was Social Credit 361, Wallace 205, Liberal 17, NDP 4.

One of the biggest cheers came with the TV announcement that Human Resources Minister Norm Levi was going down to defeat in Vancouver-Burrard.

"After that $100 million overrun, I shouldn't wonder," a Conservative party worker said.

At 9:10 p.m. Wallace made a dramatic entry, accompanied by his wife and family and preceded by Arbutus junior high student Jim Waldron on the pipes.

Wallace, in a voice choked with emotion, said:

"Really, the only speech is two words: Thank You.

"The party has not done as I had hoped . . . but there is at least one voice that is not polarized . . . and there is one voice that is not about to quit, either. If they think Scott Wallace is a fighter, they haven't seen anything yet!"

He thanked party workers and kissed campaign manager Edith Gunning.

NDP candidate Ray Vickery was the first opponent in to congratulate Wallace.

Liberal Lee Jameson also added congratulations.

At 9:35 p.m. Social Credit candidate Frank Carson came in to concede defeat.

"Thank you for a clean campaign," said Carson.

"It was a clean fight," Wallace agreed.

"Thank God we are not going to wake up in a socialist province tomorrow" said Carson.

Wallace replied that it remained to be seen how thankful voters should be about the election results.

Squeaker in Esquimalt Must Wait For the Official Count on Dec. 23

By LIZ HUGHES
Times Staff

Esquimalt's up-in-the-air election race is still anybody's win, with only 273 votes separating the two top runners and another 2,000 votes still left to be counted.

Socred Lyle Kahl came out slightly ahead of the NDP's Frank Mitchell in the votes counted Thursday night, but the estimated 2,000 votes cast under the provisions of Section 80 of the Elections Act could swing the riding either way.

That section allows people whose names did not appear on the voters list to cast a sealed ballot, which will be opened if their right to vote can be verified later. Officials said the procedure of checking the Section 80 votes will leave the two Esquimalt candidates on tenterhooks until Dec. 23.

Kahl and Mitchell may have made their respective victory and defeat speeches too early as they were delivered before the extent of the Section 80 ballots was known.

Kahl's headquarters in the Westwind Motor Inn in Langford was jammed with supclosed at 8 p.m. Drinks flowed freely and a banquet table laden with goodies was set up for the campaign workers and party supporters who came to watch their party roll to victory.

Kahl said he expected to win by a much larger margin and credited Mitchell and his campaign workers with a hard fight, "but it's obvious the people don't want socialism in B.C."

The 36-year-old school teacher ran his campaign mainly on an accessibility issue, saying former MLA Jim Gorst, who lost his party's nomination, was totally inaccessible to his constituents.

If Kahl wins, Esquimalt will return to the same Social Credit representation it had for the 19 years preceding Gorst's election in the NDP landslide in 1972.

Mitchell's campaign headquarters in the Boilermakers' Hall on Esquimalt Road cleared out early as supporters were convinced they had lost not only the constituency, but the province as well.

Leader Kahl and his son Jason

The broad smile never left Mitchell's face during the gloomy evening and even his defeat speech was injected with humor.

"I have to thank Mr. Stanfield too. With Stanfield underwear we got out there in the cold" and campaigned.

Mitchell said the coalition that defeated the NDP would not last: "You can have a party full of dedicated people fighting together for something they believe, but a party full of opportunists will fight each other.

"Social Credit has committed itself to too many selfish interests."

Esquimalt, Greater Victoria's workingman's riding, should lament the passing of the NDP, Mitchell said, because it will plunge the labor movement back into the kind of government confrontation prevalent before 1972.

Curtis Increases Margin of Victory

Social Credit workers jammed into a small office on Carey Road had two reasons to cheer Thursday night, the party had ousted the NDP government and had elected Saanich-The Islands candidate Hugh Curtis, a strong contender for a cabinet portfolio.

Each NDP defeat brought another cheer and the gathering quickly turned into a party atmosphere. The result was never in doubt after 8:30 p.m.

The party reached a climax shortly after 9 p.m. when Curtis arrived.

He said the return to a Social Credit government was more exciting than his personal victory.

"The NDP government was a phase or era through which we had to pass. We experimented with socialism and decided it was not what we wanted or needed."

He said the new government would retain some of the programs introduced by the NDP but would also build on the foundation of the previous Social Credit administration.

The Curtis victory was even more overwhelming than in 1972 when he took 36 per cent of the vote as a Conservative. This time as a Socred his final margin will be at least 50 per cent.

Curtis declined speculation on a possible cabinet portfolio. He has been mentioned by some Social Credit workers as a possible minister of municipal affairs because of his experience as Saanich mayor.

At 10 p.m. his chief rival, Carol Pickup of the NDP, came by to congratulate Curtis on his victory. There had been a few brief moments of elation at NDP headquarters when the first two polls indicated the result might be close but it soon became evident Curtis was an easy winner.

What We Can Hope For from Government

BY THE TIME THIS COLumn sees print, we'll be out from under the fuss and feathers of a hurry-up provincial election. The vote will be in and counted, the shape of our next British Columbia government will have been revealed, and life for most of us will be bumping along its normal course.

So much for the future. On this rainy evening, with the party candidates still belaboring our ears and the election still to come, I'll make no rash predictions. We voters are an unpredictable lot, capable of upsetting the most solidly-based prognostications.

I would like to see certain men returned to the Legislative Assembly. Barrett and Cocke for their humanity. Tenacious Anderson and dour Scott Wallace. Also Bennett, who has advanced by long strides toward political maturity in his weeks of campaigning.

What I hope for without regard to party and with limited expectation is good government.

Since politicians are men, not gods, there's no point in expecting more than they are likely to deliver.

But within that limitation, I think we should look to any government we elect for these basics.

First, it should govern. Having received its mandate, it should act upon it firmly and decisively. Even if to do so could reduce its popularity, it must rely on its collective wisdom rather than on what it construes as the will of the people in choosing its courses.

The government that fails to do so is shirking its responsibility. If it can't make up its mind — if it is forever casting anxious glances over its shoulder to seek justification for its actions — it courts lack of confidence.

No matter what its political philosophy, it must govern for all of us.

Since the body politic is a mixed bag of cats, this is a large assignment and a difficult one. But there's no sounder gauge of a government's quality than its approach to this aspect of its job. Factional partisanship, the favoring of one population group over another, is bad government. The bitterness it creates may be slow to manifest itself, but the governed have long memories and the last word is theirs at the polls.

Wise men in office will realize that management and labor, tenant and landlord must co-exist whether they will or no. They will maintain sensible checks and balances: price control matched to wage control when towering inflation demands such measures, and they will look to their own record in the matter of government spending.

A government must spend largely and constantly. We may grumble at the fact, but the running of a province is a costly as well as a complex business. It can't be done on peanuts. There is, however, no such animal as a government rich in its own right. As an institution, it doesn't own a nickel. It is the steward of the people's assets, which it administers in trust.

The administration that lets the highway system and its hospitals struggle along under-financed so that it can boast of a whacking surplus is no more to be commended than the government that spends with rather less forethought than a kid in a candy store. British Columbia has been cursed with each of these extremes at one time or another in the past.

Hope springs eternal: perhaps this time the luck of the draw will give us representatives with a knack for good housekeeping.

As one voter, I have my own concept of the perfect provincial government.

It will not deal with indiscriminate giveaways, but it will be constructively generous with the helpless who, good times or bad, are always with us.

It will number among its goals the true, non-hysterical conservation that makes the wisest possible use of both human and inanimate resources.

It will respect my freedom as an individual by holding restrictive law-making to an essential minimum.

But no point in expecting perfection! In elections as in life, we hope for the best and are pleasantly surprised if we escape the worst.

If this election turns up a government that will deal honestly with us and constructively with our provincial problems, we'll muddle along not too badly.

Veeck: The AL Owners Respond to Necessity

Bill Veeck, as in "wreck" is a peg-legged man who wasn't exactly beloved by his confreres the last time he owned the Chicago White Sox of the American Baseball League.

Of course, that was almost 20 years ago and Veeck wasn't appreciated because of what was termed his circus-like promotions, which it was said were demeaning to the game. Or it could be that he was just ahead of his time and some of the owners are still jealous.

Sure Veeck did all sorts of things for baseball, some good and some questionable while he was with the Sox and before that with St. Louis Browns and Cleveland Indians. He was never tied to convention.

He introduced black ballplayers to the American League, moveable fences to Milwaukee and Cleveland, and a major-league midget to St. Louis.

He also had clowns, fireworks on the scoreboard and a brass band in centre field. The band was considered just fair. But then so was the ball club. A ball hit into the bass horn was a ground-rule double.

When the White Sox won the pennant in 1959, Veeck got rid of the band and sought waivers on the clowns. Later he sold out to brothers John and Arthur Allyn and retired, ostensibly to pen his memoirs and promote unusual race tracks. The funny books sold well but the horsey set didn't exactly go for too many of his track shenanigans.

Now he is back at the head of his old team. He and his associates paid $9.75 million for the privilege. The former owner, John Allyn, lost an estimated $8 million in the last six years. So whether it's an honor as well remains to be seen.

Veeck isn't otherwise all nuts and bolts. When Curt Flood was fighting his anti-trust suit against baseball, Veeck was called in as an expert witness. It was baseball's contention then that the contractual agreement that bound a player to his original club until trade or death, was necessary to the very survival of the game.

Not necessarily so, said Veeck at the time. He suggested that a modified reserve clause would enhance the game; and once again he was ahead of his time.

He offered two alternatives. One was the so-called Hollywood contract under which a player would be "reserved" for the club's use for say, a seven-year period. Each year the contract would be renewed in return for a scheduled raise. Any time the club and player could agree to tear up the existing contract and write a new one. The other was akin the contract in football where a player could play a season without a contract and be a free agent at the end.

Veeck's modification, however, included the suggestion that actuaries would establish how much the club had spent on developing the player it was losing and this "just recompense" would be the price the new club would play.

Another interesting point he made concerning the difference between baseball and football was that baseball, generally speaking, had to find and develop its own talent, while football could pluck its talent off the campus, much of it ready made. Thus the cost to baseball was higher in the development field, there being less finesse generally in football than in baseball.

The court record also brought out another of Veeck's thoughts: that at least once in a professional player's career, he should be given the right to determine his future and thus be removed from what he termed "human bondage."

This is all solid stuff, but it didn't sell to the owners on Veeck's behalf. They wanted to retain that tight control over their players. And Veeck didn't enhance himself to them either when, during a recess at the trial, he described owners as having intractible minds that respond only to necessity.

This week, he was rejected as an American League owner on the first vote by a reported margin of 8 - 3. But he won on the second ballot, nine owners having to give their approval. It was quite a switch. But maybe this also comes under the heading of "responding to necessity."

Baseball shouldn't be the poorer because of the second vote.

IT WAS A HAPPY homecoming for centre Phil Esposito of New York Rangers in Boston Thursday night. The big centre, shown being checked by Boston's Dave Forbes, got two assists as Rangers trimmed Bruins 5-1 and snapped Boston's 14-game National Hockey League unbeaten streak.

Phil at Home In Old Boston

By The Canadian Press

It was a homecoming, of sorts, but Phil Esposito, one of Boston Bruins' leading all-time scorers, looked out of place Thursday night wearing the visiting blue uniform of New York Rangers.

Esposito showed no emotion when he received a standing ovation from a packed crowd of more than 15,000 at Boston Garden.

Once the National Hockey League game started, Esposito got down to business.

In his first Boston appearance since being traded Nov. 8 to the Rangers, the big centre managed two assists, one on Steve Vickers' tie-breaking goal in the second period, as New York took a 5-1 victory.

The loss snapped the Bruins' 14-game unbeaten string—nine wins and five ties.

In the only other NHL game Thursday, Minnesota North Stars beat Kansas City Scouts 5-3 with Bryan Hextall picking up two goals and two assists for the winners.

The results put the Rangers in a third-place tie with Atlanta Flames, both with 28 points in the Patrick Division. The Bruins remained second in the Adams Division with 35 points.

"I was pressing, there's no doubt about it," Esposito said after becoming only the seventh player in NHL history to crack the 1,200-point mark in regular season play. Gordie Howe, with Houston Aeros of the WHA, is the all-time leader with 2,030 points.

Esposito reached 1,200 points with his assist. Then he went to 1,201 by helping set up Vickers for another goal in the third period. He now has 541 goals and 660 assists in his NHL career. And the bulk of his scoring—459 goals and 553 assists—came in slightly more than eight seasons with the Bruins.

Vickers snapped a 1-1 tie with his 11th goal at 16:02 of the second period. He went in alone to beat goalie Gilles Gilbert after Esposito and Rick Middleton outmuscled Boston defenders to push the puck over.

Kansas City peppered goalie Pete Lopresti with 10 shots in the first four minutes of play, but the Scouts came up empty handed. Minnesota led 2-0 after the first frame.

Bill Goldsworthy and Dwight Bialowas gave the Stars a four-goal advantage in the second period.

Tiger Power Tames Bruins

By The Canadian Press

A goal with 55 seconds remaining by Steve Montgomery capped a late rally by Flin Flon Bombers Thursday night to give them a 4-4 Western Canada Hockey League tie with Lethbridge Broncos in Flin Flon.

In the only other league game of the night, Medicine Hat Tigers scored four power-play goals for a 6-3 decision over New Westminster Bruins before 2,889 fans in Medicine Hat.

Bombers and Broncos fought to a scoreless first period but Lethbridge opened a 3-0 lead after two and held a 4-1 edge with little more than seven minutes left in the game.

Other Flin Flon scorers were Terry Balingall, Rich Gosselin and Mark Davidson. Scoring for Lethbridge were Rick Peter, Willie Desjardins, Rick Merkel and Doug Gillespie.

Don Murdoch scored twice to improve his lead in the individual scoring race for the Tigers. He now has 37 goals for the season.

The Bruins took 10 of 17 minor penalties called in the game, plus five of nine majors.

The teams were tied 1-1 after the first period with Tigers grabbing a 3-2 lead after two. Tigers outshot the Bruins 43-37.

Mother 'Gave Up Almost Everything'

VANCOUVER (CP) — A mother told a British Columbia Supreme Court judge Thursday that she gave up "almost everything else" to make her four sons top hockey players and athletes with character.

Mrs. Jean Neeld was testifying before Mr. Justice J. C. Bouck in a libel action against CKNW radio sportscaster Al Davidson and Western Broadcasting Ltd. concerning a Davidson broadcast Dec. 17, 1973. Mrs. Neeld, her husband Norman and son Greg, 20, are the plaintiffs.

"I had four boys going into hockey at the same time," she said. "I never did worry much about social life and I don't look back on what I did as a loss."

Clement McCloskey, a North Shore Winter Club officer, testified that Mrs. Neeld was suspended from club privileges for three months in the spring of 1973 for interference with coaches. The entire family was later expelled.

Neville O'Sullivan, former hockey coach at another area winter club, Hollyburn, said that he coached Greg Neeld and that Mrs. Neeld once swore at him as she pummelled his chest with an umbrella.

Tom DeLong, a coach and hockey executive at Hollyburn, said that "from what I've heard they (the Neelds) are overpowering, disliked and unsportsmanlike."

In his broadcast, Davidson, said, "To say most of them (parents) hate the Neelds' guts would be an understatement because the Neelds sometime ago figured they had another Bobby Orr in the making and they played it that way."

J. Paul McConnell, sportscaster for radio station CKWX, said that Mrs. Neeld talked to him at the station once after a broadcast critical of the Neelds and that she was asked to leave by the news director because of noise and her unacceptable vocabulary.

Mrs. Neeld said that she might on occasion use obscene words without knowing it, but never with intent.

Davidson testified that it was "probably an overstatement" for him to say that the parents of Greg are hated by other members of the hockey community.

"I would say they were disliked through envy," Davidson told the court.

He said the purpose of his commentary was to pose the question: "Is it all worth it?"

The broadcast occurred the day Greg Neeld, now 20, had his left eye removed in a Toronto hospital following an incident on the ice while he was playing for Toronto Marlboros against Kitchener in a junior game. He subsequently resumed his career and now is trying out for Toronto Toros of the World Hockey Association.

Lakers Surprise Leading Boxers

Dave Parenteau and Ron Poole connected for Boxers, who led 2-0 early in the third period, but Poirier tied it up with two quick tallies and Bob Hall poked in what proved to be the winning goal at 14:41.

Zinn to Direct Junior Lacrosse

Fred Zinn, a 38-year-old furniture firm executive in Richmond, has been appointed commissioner of the Western Canada Major Junior Lacrosse League.

Zinn replaces Wally Donaldson of Vancouver, who resigned the position at the end of last season.

Extensive experience in community work and a good record as commissioner of the West Coast Senior "B" League last season led to Zinn's appointment, said Bob Reid of Victoria, who is general manager of Victoria McDonalds and the fill-in commissioner since Donaldson left.

One of Zinn's first tasks will be to make a major announcement, possibly next week, on the subject of expansion.

The five-team league has been considering expansion to such centres as Saanich, North Vancouver, Edmonton and Calgary.

Ticats and Andy Settle Problems

HAMILTON (CP) — Hamilton Tiger-Cats and Andy Hopkins have reached a compromise with the 26-year-old running back agreeing to a three-year contract with the Canadian Football League team.

Hopkins, who missed much of the 1975 season — the option year of his old contract — with a broken arm, had expressed displeasure with his contract several times in recent months and threatened to leave the club unless it was revised.

Neither party elaborated on the terms of the new pact, but Hopkins said it "is probably the best one in the history of the Tiger-Cats."

It also assures the Ticats of Hopkins' services over the next four seasons since an option year is part of every CFL player contract.

Hopkins, who says the contract "gives me more than I expected," said he now is on a salary par with other CFL running backs.

CASPAR LEADS IN MOROCCO

RABAT, Morocco (AP) — Billy Casper of the United States moved into the lead of the $100,000 Moroccan International golf tournament Thursday, shooting a 71, as first-round leader Tommy Aaron soared to a four-over-par 76.

Casper added a one-under 71 to his even-par 72 on the opening day for 143, giving him a two-stroke lead over France's Jean Garaialde in the hunt for the $16,000 first prize. Casper was the only player under par Thursday.

Aaron was tied for third at 146 with fellow American Ron Cerrudo and Angel Gallardo of Spain. Lee Elder of the U.S. was sixth at 148 and Americans Claude Harmon and Danny Edwards tied for seventh with 149.

Canadian Fourth

MADONNA DI CAMPIGLIO, Italy (CP) — Austrian Franz Klammer rebounded from a fall a week ago to win the men's World Cup downhill today by nearly a full second.

And while Ken Read of Calgary, surprise winner of last week's downhill at Val d'Isere, France, fell to 11th place here, David Irwin of Thunder Bay finished fourth and climbed into fifth pace in the over-all Cup standings.

Klammer dispelled any doubts about his form when he flashed down the 2,666-metre Pancugolo course with its 750-metre vertical drop and 27 gates in one minute 39.95 seconds.

The time was well below any of Thursday's practice times and 0.94 seconds ahead of second-place Philippe Roux of Switzerland who took the men's over-all lead with 26 World Cup points.

Third place went to Norwegian Erik Haker, timed in 1:40.92, while Irwin was clocked in 1:41.21. Read's time was 1:42.22.

Rounding out the top 10 today were Werner Grissman, Austria, 1:41.29; Bernhard Russi, Switzerland, 1:41.42; Karl Cordin, Austria, 1:41.56; Ernst Winkler, Austria, 1:41.77; Klaus Eberhard, Austria, 1:41.87, and Rene Berthod, Switzerland, 1:41.98.

Despite his disappointing finish today, Read shared second place in the points race with Klammer and Gustavo Thoeni of Italy, all with 25 points. Irwin was next with 22 followed by Russi, 21; Ingemar Stenmark, Sweden, and Herbert Plank, Italy, 20; Grissman, 16; Pierino Gros, Italy, and Haker, 15 points apiece.

David Murray of Abbotsford, B.C., placed 15th in today's race in 1:42.66, followed by team-mates Steve Podborski, Toronto, 1:42.85, and Jim Hunter, Calgary, 1:42.89.

Hunter is among a group in 20th place in the over-all Cup standings with two points while Podborski, with one World Cup point, is tied for 23rd.

Winter Chinook Limits Boated in Sooke Region

Salmon fishing for winter chinooks continues to be good in a number of Vancouver Island areas and this colder weather should begin to get rivers back in shape for some prime steelheading within the next few days.

Many limit catches of winter chinooks in the four or five-pound bracket are being weighed in at Sooke and some have tipped the scales to 19 pounds. Best catches have been landed near Possession point, right in Sooke Harbor and along the Sooke side of Secretary Island. Just about any type of lure or bait is working.

Becher Bay is still a hot spot with 80 per cent of the successful fishermen getting at least one fish between eight and 14 pounds right in the bay. On Wednesday, 17 boats brought back 71 winter chinooks.

Try casting a Buzz Bomb near the log booms or trolling spoons, hootchies, strip, anchovies or minnows with two pounds of weight and 60 feet of line.

Excellent catches — up to the 18½-pounder taken last weekend near Macaulay Point by Murray Stocks — have been reported by fishermen working waters between Clover Point and Albert Head. The best method has been to troll right near the bottom with hootchies, strip or anchovies.

Esquimalt Harbor is full of anchovies at the present time and some large winter chinooks have been taken by casting off the wharves and rocks.

Trial Island remains the best spot to fish off Oak Bay and many limit catches of winter chinooks to 17 pounds have been boated by using strip or anchovies about the 50-foot depth.

Jacks from four to six pounds form the main return near Wain Rock and in Satellite Channel. Troll hootchies, strip or minnows with 75 to 100 feet of line and one to 1½ pounds of lead for best results.

Numerous blues and small jacks are biting on just about any type of gear near Coles Bay, Bamberton and Willis Point.

Winter chinooks to 10 pounds are providing some pretty good catches in Finlayson Arm on hootchies (or their like), strip and three or four-inch minnows.

Cowichan Bay, Sansum Narrows and waters around Tent, Thetis and Kuper islands are yielding winter chinooks to 10 pounds along with a few blues. Moochers are doing well, which is surprising for this time of the year, and fishermen trolling a hootchie at the 80-foot level are getting the balance of the catch.

Further up-Island, Northwest Bay has dropped off a little but good catches of winter chinooks continue to come in at Nanoose Bay, near Harmac, off The Fingers and in Departure Bay. Strip is the top choice for bait but casters using Buzz Bombs or silver Deadly Dicks are also connecting.

Other fishermen spinning with Stingsildas off the Comox wharf are picking up winter chinooks to 18 pounds.

Buzz-bombing, mooching live herring or trolling with planer and strip are proven methods for nailing excellent catches of winter chinooks to 20 pounds in Duncan Bay and off the Argonaut wharf near Campbell River.

Trout anglers are still picking up some fair catches in Shawnigan, Quamichan and Bear lakes.

Near Port Alberni, steelheaders working the Somass River were landing good catches to 18½ pounds until a few days ago. Obviously this run has moved upstream, so now might be a good time to try your luck in the Stamp River.

The only other rivers producing steelies right now are the Quinsam and Campbell. A total of 35 steelhead have been weighed into a derby at the River Sportsman store (near the bridge) during the past two weeks. Two were over 20 pounds, two were 19-odd pounds and about six were between 17 and 19 pounds.

Approximately $500 worth of prizes is offered in the open derby which winds up March 31 and takes in all Island rivers.

NIBBLES: Victoria Fish and Game Protective Association will be open to the public this weekend with a turkey competition for both shotgunners and rifle shooters from 10 a.m. to dark both Satuday and Sunday . . . Riflemen will try their luck on both running boar and running deer targets and shotgunners will be competing on the five trap layouts . . . The shoot will go on regardless of the weather and sufficient equipment will be on hand to handle snow . . . To get there, take the first road to the right just north of the southernmost turnoff to Shawnigan Lake on the Island Highway.

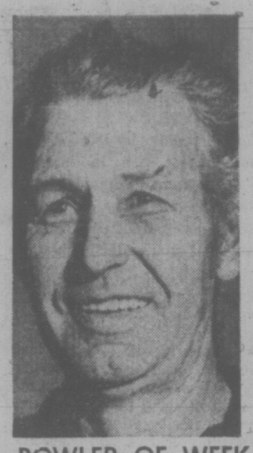
South Vancouver Island Rangers will hold a turkey shoot for riflemen only the same days and times on their Luxton Road grounds.



BOWLER OF WEEK

Setting pace in men's tenpin division during 10th week of annual Times Bowler-of-the-Week contest was Fred Nelson, who fired 625 triple in IAA League at Mayfair Lanes. Nelson rolled games of 199, 201 and 225 to earn weekly award that qualifies him for Bowler-of-the-Year rolloffs next spring.

Disturbed Bonds To Ask Questions

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — New York Yankees startled the winter baseball meetings by unloading Bobby Bonds in the first of two trades designed to give the team a new player image to go with its refurbished stadium.

The question is whether the Yankees got their money's worth in deals Thursday with California Angels and Pittsburgh Pirates. They gave up Bonds and popular pitcher Doc Medich. In return, they got a swift outfielder in Mickey Rivers, three pitchers, Ed Figueroa, Ken Brett and Dock Ellis, and infielder Willie Randolph.

Visibly shaken by the trade, Bonds said: "The next time something like this happens, I'll want to know what's going on and why before I leave. It's going to have to be with my consent, 'cause otherwise I'm not going."

The wheeling and dealing by New York was the big news at the fifth day of the meetings, which also brought the announcement that the National League would continue to finance the financially troubled San Francisco Giants until Dec. 31. The league expects the Giants to be sold to one of a number of viable offers, says league president Charles Feeney.

Among the groups seeking to buy the Giants are Labatt's Brewery of Canada and a Maple Leaf Gardens bid headed by Lorne Duguid, both interested in the team for Toronto.

The big surprise was moving Bonds, who came to the Yankees last year from the Giants for Bobby Murcer. Bonds played hurt most of last season, but still managed to hit .270 with 32 home runs, 85 runs batted in, and 30 stolen bases. He set a major league record with his 30 homer-30 stolen base accomplishment for the third year in a row.

Gabe Paul, president of the Yankees, said "we didn't win last season. I resisted trading him (Bonds), but it opened the door for more trades."

In Rivers, New York obtained one of the fastest outfielders in baseball. The 27-year-old Rivers batted .278 with only one homer and 53 RBI, but he stole 70 bases to lead the American League.

Paul and manager Billy Martin wanted Figueroa, so that Medich would be expendable in the deal with the Pirates. Figueroa, a right-hander, won 16 and lost 13 in his first full season, with a 2.90 earned-run average.

Randolph comes highly recommended by scouts as a strong defensive player with a good arm. He can play second or shortstop. He appeared in 30 games for Pittsburgh last season, and hit just .164.

The 27-year-old Brett is strictly a gamble. He has been on the disabled list several times in the last two seasons with a chronic elbow condition. When he's healthy, the lefthander is a fine pitcher. He was 9-5 with a 3.36 ERA in 1975.

In other trades Thursday, as the deal tally mounted to 11 involving 36 players, Houston sent third baseman Dave Rader, the National League's top-fielding third baseman, to San Diego for pitchers Larry Hardy and Joe McIntosh; California Angels moved first baseman Jim Spencer, whom they acquired Wednesday from Texas, to Chicago White Sox for third baseman Bill Melton and righthanded pitcher Steve Dunning, a White Sox farmhand with previous major league experience at Cleveland.

EXTORTION PLOT REVEALED

BARRANQUILLA, Colombia (AP) — Billy Martin, the New York's Yankees manager, has been the victim of an extortion attempt by a local lawyer, the daily newspaper El Herald reported Thursday.

The name of the lawyer was not disclosed by the newspaper, but it says he had asked $15,000 "to solve the case of Kelly Anne," Martin's daughter who has been held here since November 16 on drug charges.

Reports from Hollywood, Fla., quoted Martin as saying that a lawyer from Barranquilla "intended to get a big amount of money from me" with the promise of setting her free.

The case of Kelly Anne is under the jurisdiction of a military court because of the state of siege that has existed in Colombia since last June.

Miss Martin, 22, was in Colombia on vacation, and apparently she was handed a package of 445 grams of cocaine by an American named John Collins, the paper said. Officials have accused Miss Martin of attempting to board a plane for the U.S. with the cocaine concealed on her person.

The military judged hearing the case is said to have requested a report from U.S. officials on Miss Martin's background.

Racers, Oilers Win

Times News Services

Right winger Nick Harbaruk scored his 12th goal of the year to help rally Indianapolis Racers to a 3-3 overtime tie with San Diego Mariners in a World Hockey Association game Thursday night.

The Racers overcame a 3-1 deficit with two goals early in the third period. Brian McDonald scored only 20 seconds into the period to cut the score to 3-2 and then Harbaruk scored at 2:08 in the San Diego encounter.

In Calgary, two unanswered goals in the third period carried Edmonton Oilers to a 3-2 victory over Calgary Cowboys before 4,415 fans. Victory moved Edmonton within three points of the third-place Cowboys in the Canadian Division standings.

Rusty Patenaude, Tom Sheehy and Norm Ullman scored the Edmonton goals while Butch Deadmarsh accounted for all the Calgary scoring. Goalkeeper. Chris Worthy was a standout for the Oilers as he blocked 38 shots. Edmonton fired only 17 at Don McLeod in the Calgary net.

WHA Ref Returns As Lineman

TORONTO (CP) — Ron Asselstine, who quit as a World Hockey Association referee last Friday after a run-in with Gordie Howe, said Thursday he has reconsidered and will return to work as a linesman.

The WHA "left the door open for me to come back as either a referee or a linesman, but I don't think I can continue with the pressures of refereeing," he said.

The incident that sparked his quitting occurred in Houston when the veteran Aeros' winger elbowed the official in the stomach while arguing a minor infraction.

Asselstine gave Howe a game misconduct and the Aeros' star winger and club president subsequently was assessed a two-game suspension, the first suspension in nearly 30 years of professional hockey for the 47-year-old Howe.

Earlier in the game, Asselstine had given Houston's Ron Grahame a game misconduct after the young goaltender claimed a Winnipeg player had interferred with him just prior to a Jets' goal.

Minor Hockey Learns to Put The Boy Ahead of Winning

Dave Andrews of Victoria, development co-ordinator of the B.C. Amateur Hockey Association, today outlined the philosophy behind a series of provincial clinics aimed at development of the player rather than winning.

"We're trying to get away from the highly structured, adult-oriented competitive programs where boys are playing NHL hockey at the age of 8," he said.

The "development-of-the-boy" theme was stressed at a four-day clinic last weekend in Vancouver attended by 76 candidates for level-four coaching certification.

Instructors included Billy Harris, former coach of the Canadian and Swedish national teams; Phil Maloney, manager-coach of the National Hockey League Vancouver Canucks; Dennis McDonald, Canadian Amateur Hockey Association technical director, and Dr. Dennis Stadler, a physiologist from San Diego State University.

Level four is the top rung for certification of hockey coaches in B.C., although there are two more levels nationally.

Andrews estimates about half of the province's 6,000 minor hockey coaches have first- and second-level certification. About 1,600 were certified in clinics during September and October.

Level-one certification involves five hours of clinical instruction, including one hour on the ice, and teaches coaching philosophy and how to deal with youngsters and their parents. Level two, ir volving eight clinic hours of which two are on-ice instruction, deals more with teaching basic skills.

Andrews listed Victoria, Saanich and Juan de Fuca among associations which have been active in the certification program. Esquimalt started this fall and Oak Bay and the Racquet expect to begin soon, he said.

"We find that parents are beginning to respect coaches who have certification," Andrews added. As a result, he hoped coaches would stay involved longer than the 1½-season average of the past.

The program, funded by the provincial coaching association through the leisure services branch of the government, offers an outline on introducing youngsters to the game.

"We feel it's important to get away from the competitive structure at the beginners' level," Andrews explained. "The boys just aren't equipped with the necessary skills to handle a game situation."

A skilled youngster might be ready for organized league play at an early age, but Andrews says it take about two years before the average boy is ready to enter a highly developed competitive structure.

Most minor hockey associations are using the program to some extent and about 10 are following it to the letter.

Under it, a boy spends his first two or three months learning the basics.

The idea is to keep the youngster on the ice and not riding a bench while more skilled players go after a victory.

In cases where large numbers are involved, the ice is divided into two or three sections and everybody skates. There might be shinny games or skill contests, but there is no emphasis on winning.

The youngsters, Andrews said, like it although "it usually takes a month or so to educate the parents to this concept."

The program has been operating for only three years so it may be too early to assess its full value, but there are indications it's working.

As Andrews put it:

"You hear so much of the negative aspects of minor hockey — one kid hits another over the head with his stick and is suspended for 10 years — but we feel the problems can be solved by training the coaches."

One Big Fish Landed

NEW YORK (AP) — World Team Tennis landed one of the biggest fish in international waters, Romania's Ilie Nastase, Thursday and dangled lines in front of other established stars, including Arthur Ashe of the United States, Australian Rod Laver and Jimmy Connors of the U.S.

Nastase, who only last weekend won the rich Grand Prix Masters in Stockholm, wound up as a member of the Hawaii Leis after a bit of wheeling and dealing involving New York Sets.

The Romanian decided while in Sweden that he would like to play with WTT but not in New York, where he has been roundly criticized for his on-court gamesmanship and explosions.

The Sets, who owned his draft rights, gave Nastase permission to deal with the Leis. They came to terms quickly. Ilie signed a one-year contract for a salary reported in excess of $100,000.

Close to 200 of the biggest names in the game were drafted but only a few likely will see action in the schedule which starts in April and continues through the middle of August.

It is doubtful tha Connors would play with Cleveland, however. The Nets have an male star already in Marty Riessen and also have Martina Navratilova, the Czech defector, under a $90,000 contract.

Borg, runner-up to Nastase in the Masters, also is reported to be interested in WTT play. Ashe, as president of the Association of Tenis Professionals with a heavy tournament commitment, is sure to spurn all WTT offers.

For Royal Sailor, A Victoria Report

AROUND OUR SHORES

Jim reports the prince spent a full 20 minutes asking questions about the Swiftsure, winter keel-boat racing and such well-known B.C. boats as Endless Summer, the former Dame Pattie, and Charisma, a 1973 Admiral's Cup yacht.

Jim, whose pictures have earned him a reputation with sailors around the world, was invited to the palace — as the only Canadian and overseas member — along with 39 members of the British Yachting Journalists Association.

This was Jim's second trip to Britain this year. He was there earlier to take pictures of the Admiral's Cup racing.

Philip, an enthusiastic 'rag-hauler' from way back, competed in the yacht Yoeman. The British team of Yoeman, Battlecry and Noryema won the event, which drew a field of 750 boats from 19 countries.

The Royal Victoria Yacht Club has another race scheduled for Sunday. Start time is 10 a.m. Many of those who will be competing were out last Sunday for two round-the-buoy races of the Turkey Head Sailing Association.

In the second race it was John Booth's Umpka, followed by Gerry Porter's Sunshine, Freeway, Walter Roots' Morning Calm and John Dewey's Shuttlecock.

The club's dinghy sailors will have series racing on Saturday, beginning at 1:30 p.m.

The top Laser competitors last Saturday were Tim Roots, Dennis Woodward and Ian Pickles.

The club's Cal 20 fleet was also racing on Saturday, first boat home being George Lewis' Sea Fever. She edged out Bob Tubman's Folly, Frank Cushion's Por Gusto, Conrad Hoskins' Kelsib and Tony Marshall's Sunbeam.

★ ★ ★

Dinghy sailors of the Esquimalt Squadron, Canadian Forces Sailing Association will be racing in Esquimalt Harbor on Sunday, beginning at 1 p.m.

Olaf Thyvold is the winner of the 11-race Laser II series, completed last weekend. George Kirkwood finished second and Gary Rogers third. The 1975 Laser club championships were won by George, who edged out Frank Towler, Robin Spear and Gary.

Tora Thyvold won in 420 sailing. The 1975 Fireball championships, won by Dennis Carlow, produced the closest racing ever. Finishing almost on his transom, so to speak, were Maurice Robinson and Tim Cochrane.

The club extends an invitation to members of other yacht clubs in the area to attend another of their film showings. This one takes place at 8 p.m. Thursday in the Munro Head clubhouse.

★ ★ ★

The Saanich Peninsula Sailing Association will be racing at Sidney again on Saturday. Things get under way at 1:30 p.m.

Sailing a Minto, Chris Flint won last weekend's competition. Runner-up was Eric Jespersen. Tim Bussey finished third.

Victoria Canoe Club members will be paddling the waters of the Esquimalt Lagoon on Sunday. If you have a boat and would like to join them be at the bridge by 1 p.m.

DRAW DATE SWITCHED

If you figured it would be "your turn" Saturday in the B.C. Federation of School Athletic Associations sports lottery, you'll have to wait until January.

Because of recent disruptions in mail service, the draw date has been changed. Originally scheduled for Saturday, the draw will be made on Jan. 13, association officials announced Thursday.

All proceeds from the lottery go to high school sports programs.

An Electronic Bloodhound To Sniff-Out Terror

OTTAWA (UPI) — In a Quebec prison, an "electronic bloodhound" was unleashed this year and not only sniffed out a number of explosives caches, but identified prisoners who had handled the dynamite.

Management of an American mine was embarassed when it turned out terrorists used materials stolen from them for a bombing. They asked for a demonstration of the Canadian-made explosives sniffer to see if it could prevent another theft.

During the tests, the device, trade named "Explosives Scentry," spotted all subjects carrying explosives but let pass workers who had been handling dynamite all day long.

Makers of the device, Leigh Instruments Limited of Ottawa, gave these examples of past performance at the unveiling this week of the tool they say will protect the public from terrorist bombs.

Company spokesman John Dewar said he could not say where the equipment is, what it was being used for or any technical evaluation of its sensitivity.

"This would tip our hand to attempts at possible countermeasures by the terrorists," he said.

The new detectors, developed with a grant from the federal government which gives it 50 per cent ownership, senses the presence of vapors which surround explosives.

These vapors will penetrate barriers such as clothing, wrappers and luggage.

A hidden bomb detected at a distance, across a room or in a ventilation air system, triggers an audible alarm which increases in volume as the device is moved closer.

Bombs are not the end of the story, however. Dewar said the company is adapting the device to make it capable of uncovering the presence not only of resinous drugs such as hashish but even crystaline and seemingly odorless substances such as heroin.

The devices were shown to Canadian defence forces, who will be in charge of security for the 1976 summer Olympics at Montreal. Also present were the military attaches of a number of terrorist-plagued nations.

Two models were displayed, a 26-pound portable which in small numbers will sell for $6-$8,000, and walk-through detector suitable for airports or building entrances which retails at $18,000. Prices are expected to drop as production increases.

The company sees a number of uses for the devices:

—At airports they could detect passengers or baggage carrying explosives.

—A device placed in the air outlet duct of a building would warn if an explosive was placed anywhere within it and then track the "odor" back to source.

—It could establish "even days afterward" if a vehicle had been used to carry explosives.

—At high-security parking lots the machines could be used to warn of the entry of a vehicle carrying explosives.

"Almost any object will give off vapors and explosive materials give off characteristic vapors. These diffuse through the air and create a detectable cloud," Dewar explained.

"Detectors pump air into electro-chemical detectors and the particles in the vapor are converted into an electrical signal and these electrical signals are analyzed to be sure that the vapor is explosive."

He said "the instrument detects a broad range of the many materials that create an explosion."

Chemical sniffers are not new, but Dewar said "no one else in the world has had an instrument as sensitive, or the means of sweeping the vapors off the body or clothing without contact which we have."

He said a number of sales have been made already to foreign countries, but he would not identify them.

Next development phase, he said, is a sniffer capable of adjusting to the odor of a particular individual for use in tracking or proving a person had been at a particular location.

Alcohol Blamed For North Woes

YELLOWKNIFE, , N.W.T. (CP) — Many social problems in the Canadian Arctic are created and preserved in alcohol, says A. H. Buttler.

Chief Superintendent Buttler, 49, came here in early fall to head RCMP G division, responsible for policing in the 1.5 million square miles of the Northwest Territories.

The commanding officer may be a rookie in the North, but Inspector Mike Dwernichuk, in charge of staffing and personnel, has 17 years experience. Both are concerned with the effects of alcohol.

After visiting a number of Arctic communities, Chief Superintendent Buttler concluded that "one of the major problems in the North that we're facing right now is liquor."

Inspector Dwernichuk said alcohol has become readily available in many remote areas where 10 years ago liquor had to be ordered in bulk a year ahead. The only liquor outlet at the time was in Yellowknife and to import any quantity from another province which might be closer meant permits and money.

Now there are regular jet flights all over the North and people with no background in the use of alcohol and no education on liquor's possibly devastating effects have alcohol available to them.

Chief Superintendent Buttler said drinking is a major activity in the North, given the climate, isolation and boredom.

There had been some influx of drugs but it was not significant.

Chief Superintendent Buttler commands 155 men as well as 29 special constables, mostly Indians and Eskimos who have obvious special qualifications.

Division manpower is expected to increase by 14 next April but the commanding officer expects more will be needed in future.

"With the increase in growth in the larger centres . . . and highway construction, there is considerably more activity in this area (Yellowknife) of the Northwest Territories. With the present study under way concerning the Mackenzie Valley pipeline, I can see a demand for increased policing services."

The Arctic is staffed with RCMP volunteers. They sign on for three years. While some can't cope with the isolation, others have served in the North for 10 years or more.

Housing, transportation, communications and special equipment push the cost of policing twice as high in the Arctic as it is in the south.

Alcohol has forced the RCMP to change from administrators to enforcers, but despite the added dimension for conflict, Chief Superintendent Buttler said officers still have close relations with the community.

Service in the Arctic, he said, requires discretion but doesn't mean the law is different. For instance an offender's court appearance may be delayed until the trapping season is finished.

Torture Condemned

UNITED NATIONS (Reuter) — The United Nations General Assembly unanimously adopted a declaration Wednesday against torture. The 144-nation assembly approved the 12-article declaration by the UN conference on prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders held in Geneva in September.

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

Although the final contract in today's deal was a lowly part-score, the play contains a textbook situation that one frequently overlooks. The hand arose in a national tournament. East-West vulnerable. South deals.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Two of ♦.

Not many players had the chance to test their skill with the South cards at a contract of one notrump — their East-West opponents were too busy playing the hand at spades, making either nine or ten tricks, depending on how the play went.

At one notrump, East put up the spade ten on the opening lead, which South won with the king. He cashed the ace and king of diamonds, hoping to catch the jack. But East discarded a heart on the second diamond lead, revealing that West still possessed the jack.

Of course if South now cashed the diamond queen, he would fell West's jack. At this point, dummy would have the singleton ten remaining. While this card would be a winner, after it was cashed South couldn't return to his own hand to make his fifth diamond. What to play next after winning the ace and king of diamonds at tricks two and three?

To trick four South led a spade and dared the opponents to beat him. Had East been clairvoyant, after winning the spade with his jack, he would have returned a heart, thereby creating a couple of winners in this suit for the defenders. In the actual play, however, the opponents gratefully cashed three spade tricks. On the third spade play, dummy's nine of diamonds was discarded, leaving the board with the singleton ten. They then took three club tricks, but that was the end of the line for them.

Upon regaining the lead with dummy's ace of hearts, South led the board's ten of diamonds and overtook it with his queen, West's jack falling. Declarer now cashed both his two and three of diamonds, and ended up with his contracted-for seven tricks: one spade, one heart, and five diamonds.

When the scores were posted, it was observed that by fulfilling the one contract, North-South secured a "top score." It was well deserved.

Larry looked. "It seems okay to me. What's wrong?"

"Nothing, just that it's quite an odd amount," replied John. "When you switch the dollars with the cents you get just three cents more than four times what it is."

How much was that?

(Answer Monday)

Yesterday's answer: TARGET was 102831.

SPACEMEN HONORED

CARACAS (Reuter) — U.S. astronaut Thomas Stafford and Soviet cosmonaut Alexei Loenov were decorated Wednesday by the Venezuelan Air Force for their "services for the good of humanity." The two men, who commanded this year's Soyuz-Apollo space linkup, were invited to Venezuela to attend the 55th anniversary of the founding of the air force and to give a series of lectures.

Eastern Bloc Works Together On New Russian Pipeline Plan

MOSCOW (Reuter) — Building has begun on a pipeline of nearly 2,000 miles to carry natural gas from the Soviet Union to six East European countries.

Five countries—East Germany, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland and Bulgaria—are helping build the pipeline and the sixth, Romania, is providing finance and gas-processing equipment.

Once the project is completed—it is due to be fully operational in 1980—each country will receive deliveries of gas in proportion to money and effort invested.

Now construction is under way, the Soviet press is presenting its progress as smooth and concerted.

But there have been signs of friction, particularly over the large contingents of labor some of the other countries were meant to provide.

Romania, from the start apparently balked at committing any of its already sparse workforce, and earlier this year Czechoslovakia said it was asking the Soviet Union to do the actual pipe-laying along its section.

Hungary put in a similar request, saying it lacked the technology and machinery to handle the type of pipe the Russians wanted to use and now, according to press reports in those countries, both nations will be making up for their smaller physical contribution with monetary compensation.

But as planned, both will build pumping stations—there will be 22 in all—and support facilities along their stretches.

In an interview with Pravda, the Soviet minister for construction of oil and gas industry enterprises, Boris Shcherbine, made no mention of the labor difficulties. But he said some 5500 men should be working on the project by the end of the year. The figure should ultimately rise to around 30,000.

A further snag indicated by the minister was in the supply of pipes. These come from France and West Germany as well as the Soviet Union, and according to Shcherbine many are being held up at ports on the Baltic and Black Seas.

The pipeline should double Soviet gas supplies to Eastern Europe, providing a significant boost to energy-consuming industries and over-all economic integration.

It starts from the Soviet Union's newest gas fields around Orenburg in the southern Urals and will cross the country to the Czech border. No estimate has been given of its cost.

The first few miles already have been laid, and Eastern European workers now are establishing temporary settlements and support bases along their particular stretches, Pravda said.

By the end of the year, planners hope to have some 150 miles in the ground. The entire length will be constructed with 56-inch pipe, which Soviet officials say will make it the longest pipeline of its capacity in the world.

The pipeline contract runs for 20 years, but once Moscow's six partners have recouped their investment in supplies of gas, they will presumably have to begin paying for further deliveries at the going rate.

Man Ambushed

TORONTO (CP) — Dieter Karl Reschka, 38, was ambushed and shot to death in his car Wednesday a few feet from his home, Metropolitan Toronto police say. They said the killer apparently hid in the back seat of the car and shot Reschka after he drove the vehicle out of the driveway of the home, then drove away in the car after dumping the body onto the snow-covered road. The car has not been recovered.

HOSTESS Marion McLaughlin entertains birthday guests and customers in her living room and all take time to view an assortment of paintings, pottery and other handicrafts.

LIVING ROOM LOUVRE . . . ON VINING

That was the day Chuck and Marion McLaughlin of 1312 Vining opened their Vining Street Neighborhood Gallery.

It was business as usual Wednesday although the McLaughlins were holding a party for Chuck's 35th birthday.

As the couple and their friends sipped tea and munched on birthday cake around the fire customers roamed around the room eyeballing paintings, pottery and other handmade crafts.

The former Prince George couple decided to start the neighborhood gallery in order to raise some extra Christmas money for themselves and aspiring artists who find it difficult to find an outlet for their work.

"We found it hard to display our work. If you ask a gallery you have to have enough to cover all the walls," Marion explained. "And stores and galleries charge you 35 to 40 per cent."

A small newspaper advertisement netted the couple 40 callers, 30 of whom came to an organizing meeting. When the gallery opened there were 15 exhibitors. That number has grown to 33 within 10 days. The Mclaughlins get 10 per cent of each artist's take.

The two family cats, Kim and Mo Jo wandered around and introduced themselves to the customers as McLaughlin and his friends combined business and the birthday festivities.

Marion excused herself to deal with a housewife bringing in her second consignment of pottery for sale.

Her husband explained the exhibitors range in age from the late 'teens to the 70s, most of them being senior citizens. The response has been so great that the McLaughlins have had to give up another room in their home for paintings.

As one customer admired an exquisite free form piece of pottery, McLaughlin reported it was one of several pieces made by a retired dentist.

"He also used to make artificial eyes so he's good at working with his hands," McLaughlin said.

Another customer admired the large terrariums of hand-blown glass made by another housewife, her companion pondering which set of carved wooden salad forks and spoons she should choose. Would it be the pair with frogs on the handles or those topped with ingenious fishmen?

McLaughlin and his wife are enjoying their Louvre living room.

"It gives you a whole new look at Victoria," Marion says, "The city has its own culture but there's not that much opportunity for working artists."

What started as a venture to raise some holiday money may end as a permanent centre in the Vining Street area.

"We wanted to get a few dollars for Christmas and get everybody else in it but the response has shown there's a real need for something like this," McLaughlin said.

Another Season Tugging on Boots

TORONTO (CP)—Like it or not, Canadian women face yet another season tugging on boots.

Inflation has hit the feet his year and although boot dressing is all the style, the cost of a good pair of leather or suede boots for some people will be the equivalent of almost one week's pay, says Del Foxton of the Tana Company of Montreal.

"Fashion boots should give warmth and protection in cold snowy, wet weather," she said. "But because suede or leather boots have seams, zippers and attached soles they are not waterproof, nor are they resistant to salt stains."

She said owners of leather boots should use a spray and wax protector. It is the spray that protects against salt stains and the wax that shines and seals seams, stitching and sole edges to prevent leaking.

"For maximum protection, suede and leather boots should be treated weekly. This protection must be repeated all winter long. One application is not enough as protection wears off in snow, slush and salt."

She said that boots should always to dried at room temperature—never a radiator or stove, as the boots will lose their natural oils and become hard.

Miss Foxton said that rubber or vinyl boots in one moulded piece without seams, zippers or separated soles are waterproof.

"These boots may not be warm enough for winter wear but an insole can be inserted for added comfort."

Nixon's Secretary Retires

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Former president Richard Nixon's personal secretary, Rose Mary Woods, has retired from the government payroll.

The General Services Administration said Wednesday Miss Woods, who earned $36,000 a year, was on the federal payroll after Nixon resigned Aug. 9, 1974, until her own retirement Nov. 22. She was paid during that period as part of a transition staff arranged for the former president by Congress.

She reportedly will receive an annual pension of $15,000.

Moynihan Award

NEW YORK (Reuter) — The International League for the Rights of Man announced Wednesday the award of its human rights prize to Daniel Patrick Moynihan, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, for his forthright advocacy of human rights.

Contingency Fee: Lawyers' Risk

By LYNNE GORDON

Contingency fees can give consumers greater access to justice through the courts. It's an alternative to paying a lawyer by the hour as the case progresses.

People with modest means generally cannot afford to pursue a law suit against a major company no matter how well founded their complaint may be. Even in major liability cases where a person has been seriously injured by a defective product, legal expenses are a hurdle most people simply cannot overcome.

"There's no question that a contingency fee system gives the average person greater access to the courts, particularly in product liability cases," says Craig Spangenber, a Cleveland lawyer who handled many leading product liability cases for the plaintiff—including the recent Thalidiomide cases.

Under a contingency fee system, the lawyer agrees to take the case with the understanding that he will receive a percentage of the recovery money. The client has no financial investment, in fact the lawyer forwards the expenses to the client, until after the case has been settled. If the case is not won, the lawyer doesn't get paid.

That's a risky proposition for lawyers. A gamble. It's little wonder that many lawyers are vehemently opposed to such a system. Six Canadian provinces already have some type of a contingency fee system. But the debate still continues, notably in Ontario, where a committee of the law society is studying the issue.

Let's look at some of the arguments against contingency fees and Mr. Spangenberg's replies to them.

Critics say, "Contingency fees will lead to vexations and unfounded litigation."

"Very unlikely," Spangenberg replies. "A lawyer knows better than anyone when a case is frivolous and legal services are sought simply to satisfy some personal animosity of the client." He won't take the case on a contingency basis. He will only take it if he thinks it's worthwhile and there's a chance of recovery.

Critics say, "Contingency fees may lead to unethical conduct by lawyers in an attempt to secure their percentage."

A professional golfer doesn't cheat simply because he knows the first prize is high and the last is zero, Mr. Spangenberg argues.

A lawyer is going to try to win, and try hard, whether he's paid on a contingency basis or a flat hourly fee. It won't do his reputation any good to be known as a loser in either case. Unethical practice is not a problem resulting from contingency fees. The profession itself must be strictly regulated to prevent sharp practices regardless of the system of payment.

Critics say, "Contingency fees will lead to solicitation of large cases by lawyers."

Once again, Spangenberg points out, "This is not a problem created by contingency fees. Surely it tempts the thief to see a window display in a jewelers window. But we're not going to abolish window displays because of that. It is not the contingency aspect that is the temptation, but rather the size of the fee, regardless of how it is paid."

Critics say, "Contingency fees lead to unreasonably high fees for lawyers."

This is rarely the case, Spangenberg claims. he quotes a major New York study which indicated that the average recovery was $1,500 and the average fee was $500. "Now that might look like the fee was one third but I'm sure that if there were very small cases that were taken on a high percentage because of the work involved to recover the small sum as well as large recoveries where the percentage for the lawyer was small."

Usually if the possible recovery is very large, the lawyer will agree to a small percentage, say 15 per cent of the recovery. If on the other hand, the recovery is likely to be small, the lawyer will ask for a larger percentage, say 40 per cent, to make it worth his while.

Contingency fees are not a panacea to cure all problems in our legal system. But they can go a long way in giving the average man a break, in opening the door and giving him the choice of pursuing satisfaction through the courts. Without a contingency fee system, that's a choice he has only in theory not in practice.

Holiday Wreaths Easy to Make

MOTHER EARTH NEWS

There's huge seasonal market for holiday wreaths, and it takes only a little effort to cash in on that demand. What better occupation than to sit by a warm fire and shape boughs into beautiful ornaments which will hang in windows and doorways far and wide come December?

The first ingredient in your new occupation is access to suitable trees. Different parts of the country boast different species of fir: balsam, white, silver, grand and Douglas. Your local forester or nursery should be able to give you all the facts you need about the resources of your area's woods.

Your next step is to go on a "tipping" expedition to gather boughs: This is just as much fun as "making" and gives the whole family a chance to get involved in the project.

Bough collecting calls for a good pair of garden snippers, a ball of string and a whole batch of carrying sticks (branches about 6 feet long and an inch in diameter, cut in a sort of "Y" shape). When you've found a good stand of trees, simply snip off the ends of branches — "tips" — in lengths of about 15 to 18 inches and hook them over your stick, beginning in the crook of the "Y".

Keep stacking on the greenery until the holder is full (but not too heavy to carry). Then tie the string tightly from one end of th "Y" to the other, and you have a neat two-handled carrier full of fir tips. The loaded sticks are easily toted out of the woods, a pair at a time, between two people.

A couple of hints: Don't cut the tips too soon before you need them, or the needles will dry up and fall off after the wreath is made. And, more important, please don't strip the fir grove bare! Unless you're going to be clearing the land where you gather materials, be selective and kind to the trees.

Next, you'll need some additional materials. But before you go out and buy them, you might want to look into an arrangement which can save you that trouble and a good deal more: It may be possible to make wreaths for local people who sell them to big-time nurseries.

If not many folks in your parts are turning out wreaths, though, you might increase profits by marketing your own creations at a roadside stand, to nurseries or through advertising.

One other alternative is to stop at the tipping stage and sell greenery to middlemen, who usually "make" themselves and always need materials.

Let's assume, though, that you're going to do the "making" yourself. Apart from tips (you should get about 3 20-inch wreaths from the contents of one stick), you'll need your snippers again, plus lots of spools of thin wire — 22 to 24 guage — and the heavy wire rings to which the boughs are attached. The last two items can be purchased from a hardware store, if you're not working for a middleman who supplies them.

All set? Then proceed as follows:

(1) Lay a wire ring down on a flat surface and attach one end of the thin wire to this base. The strand won't be cut until the wreath is completed.

(2) Take a tip and break off the top 6 to 8 inches. Fashion this and the other "leftover" pieces into a fan, with all the fat ends together.

(3) Place the fan—right side up — on the wire ring, hold the ends of the twigs together tightly, and wrap the thin wire a few times around both frame and greenery.

(4) Make another fan just like the first.

(5) Flip the ring over and place the second fan, also right side up, about 2 inches along the frame from the first (so that the two bunches are back to back). Fasten it with two or three tight turns of thin wire.

(6) Continue this process — making fans and attaching them to alternate sides of the ring, always right side up — all the way around the circle. Keep the wire wrapped tightly at all times, and try to make the bundles the same size and thickness throughout.

(7) Complete the circle by tucking the last two fans under the first, with the branches held up. Make these final bunches a bit shorter than normal, so they'll fit nicely.

(8) Wrap the last fans securely with thin wire, tie off the strand out of sight under the greenery, and let the branches fall back to cover the knot.

There you have it . . . your first wreath! You should be looking at an unbroken succession of fans on both sides of the frame, with no wire showing. If the overall effect is too shaggy, you can use the snippers to clean up the middle hole and trim off whatever pieces of branch you think are sticking out in the wrong places.

Wreaths are made in diameters ranging from 8 to 24 inches, and the price varies accordingly. It's easier to learn on a larger size, but once you know how, you can make more of the smaller ornaments in less time.

How about you? If you get organized right now, you may be able to gather enough "green energy" over the next few weeks get you through the winter months. Good luck, and happy "making!"

Welch Medical Report

By DR. WILLIAM WELCH

Vaccination against influenza has been described by cynics as being very like most countries' preparation for the next war: it is really a plan against the last war and may not necessarily take into account what the next one will be like in fact.

Just as war machines change, so influenza viruses have a way of changing, and yet the vaccines have to be made from the viruses that have been around most recently.

This year's vaccine includes type A strains, isolated in late 1974 and early 1975, and one type B (the so-called Hong Kong strain) which was fairly widespread the winter before last. Thus the preparation is called a "bivalent" vaccine.

The Public Health Service advises that although it has been customary, when bivalent influenza vaccine is administered for the first time, to give it in two doses, the more powerful vaccines available in recent years are maximally effective when given in a single dose. Apparently the second dose provides little additional protection.

There are certain groups of people who are at high risk of coming down with the flu, but the Public Health Service says that only about one out of every 10 such Americans is being vaccinated each year against influenza.

Among those who ought to be vaccinated are chiefly the elderly and the chronically ill. This includes those who have any variety of heart trouble, chronic bronchitis or emphysema, kidney disease or diabetes. And in general they recommend vaccination of everybody 65 and older.

In a study of the effectiveness of influenza vaccination among the elderly in Cardiff, Wales, recently reported in "Lancet," the distinguished London medical journal, it was found that natural immunity to the flu is not widespread before vaccination among the elderly, but that after vaccination an immune response was obtained in the majority of the subjects studied.

Over a three-year period, immunity was maintained with annual innoculations and although there was little difference in overall respiratory illnesses between the vaccinated and unvaccinated groups, those who received the vaccine showed a substantially smaller incidence of bronchopneumonia and there were significantly fewer deaths than among those people not so protected.

A word of caution is necessary to protect those who may be allergic to eggs. The bivalent vaccine is from virus grown in embryonated eggs and as a result the vaccine should not be administered to anyone who is sensitive to egg protein.

DEAR SANTA . . . I'VE BEEN BAD

HELSINKI, Finland (UPI) — The world's children are writing to Santa Claus in record numbers this year, and 19 of his helpers are working overtime to make sure each letter is answered.

Although the children know they must be good to receive presents from Santa, the letter from Augi Cassidy of St. Joseph, Mo., summed up the situation. "I know I have been pretty bad at times, but I wish I could have a few things," she wrote.

Michael Sutton of East Morsey, England, added an enticement for Santa's visit. "I will leave you a glass of gin and some chocolate," he wrote.

The letters were among thousands received around the world. Many post offices that receive mail addressed to Santa Claus at the North Pole, Reindeer Land or other exotic places send the letters to Finland.

The Helsinki post office gives them to the Finnish tourist board, which has produced a letter with Santa's own handwriting, pictures of him and a puzzle on the reverse side.

The tourist board estimates it will answer at least 30,000 letters this year, with about half coming from Finland. About 1,500 letters arrive daily and 10,000 have already been answered.

Last year the board replied to 10,000 foreign letters.

'Not All That Bad', Armless Girl Says

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa (UPI) — Fifteen-year-old Wendy Stoeker can drive a car, write a letter, dive into a swimming pool and do tricks on a trampoline, just like many other of her classmates at Jefferson High School.

There is one difference. Wendy has no arms.

She was born without them and has lived all of her life without them and "it really isn't all that bad."

"When I was little I didn't even realize I didn't have any arms," she says. "When you have never had them it doesn't seem that bad."

The high school sophomore does things with her feet that most people do with their arms. And in winning style. Wendy is ranked 11th in Iowa in diving and took fifth place for the J-Hawks as a trampolinist on the girls' gymnastics team.

"When I was little my mom ran out of things for me to do so she had me try pottery," Wendy said in an interview. "And I won first prize in a contest. I decided if I could do that I could do other things."

Her mother took her to the YWCA when she was 4 to learn how to swim.

"She (the instructor) tied her arms behind her back to see what it was like to swim with no arms," Wendy said. "Pretty soon I was going off the baords. I also learned to jump on the trampoline and I figured anything I could do on the tramp I could do on the diving boards."

Wendy said her father passed out when the little armless baby was brought to him after she was born.

"My mom was at a loss at first, but one day I picked up a rattle with my feet," she said. "Then she knew I would be okay."

"I didn't think I would be doing all these things I am. If it wasn't for my mom, I wouldn't. My mom is a great lady. We're really close."

Wendy wants to become an occupational therapist and help amputees by working with kids with no arms.

"I think I can help them because I know all the problems and I figure I could help them more than someone with arms," she said.

Her mother gets many phone calls from people seeking help after they hear about Wendy. She said she heard about a boy in Chicago without arms who is the star kicker on his football team and wrote to him.

"I hope he writes back," she said.

Father Needs Help

DEAR ABBY: I need advice badly and have no one to talk to.

My girl friend told me that from the age of 10 until she was 15, her father continuously molested her every chance he got when no one was home.

She never told anyone about this because he threatened to kill her if she did.

The problem is that there are still seven younger girls at home, and she is afraid he will do the same to them.

What can be done to make her father seek help without others finding out? Also they don't have much money in case he needs psychiatric treatment.

She doesn't want revenge, and she doesn't want the police to lock him up because her mother needs his paycheque badly.

I told her to threaten to call the police if he molests any of the other girls. Do you think that would work? He is a strict father, and all his children fear him. — Helping a friend

DEAR HELPING: Tell your friend that she should confide her fears to a clergyman, doctor, teacher, relative or some other responsible adult. Assure her that her father is a very sick man and if he doesn't get help immediately, the consequences could be tragic.

And please write again and let me know what has happened. I care.

DEAR ABBY: My husband is a mail carrier, and I'm sure very few people know what their mailmen have to contend with. For example: With the crime rate so high, many people keep mean dogs to protect their property. That's fine, but these dogs should be tied up so they can't attack deliverymen.

My husband averages about one bite a week from dogs whose owners claim they "never bite anyone, but like to make a lot of noise."

Another problem: The mail carrier is charged for all postage due on mail on his route, and if the customer doesn't reimburse him, the money comes out of the mailman's pocket.

You may say, "Two or 3 cents isn't all that much," but my husband has over 300 stops to make some days, and it all adds up.

Care to comment?—PHOENIX WIFE

DEAR WIFE: I am informed that mail carriers are not obligated to deliver mail at homes where watchdogs are allowed to run loose.

As for postage-due mail: True, the carrier is charged for all postage-due mail on his route. He leaves the mail and an envelope stating the amount due, and if the customer doesn't reimburse him, he's out of luck.

'FRIGHTENED AS RABBITS'

EDMONTON (CP) — Some people are "as frightened as rabbits" when they attend group sessions to assist in creative adjustment to divorce, separation or death, says the man who conducts the sessions.

"These people want closeness but are afraid of it because of the past," said Jan DeWaal, a counsellor at the publicly-funded Family Life Education Council (FLEC), which initiated the groups.

Guilt, loneliness, resentment, feelings of worthlessness and loss of purpose often create "open wounds" among people experiencing separation, explained Adrian Greenwood, executive director of the public education agency.

This fall FLEC, sensing the need for a low-key, accepting environment to help people deal with these feelings, began an informal series of "Being Singled" groups.

People going through divorce or separation have "certain priority needs" which are not uncommon to other people but are intensified by the situation, Greenwood said.

"They resent society, they resent their parents for bringing them up to be the way they are, they resent the other person's parents. Essentially they resent themselves, but they are in no position to admit that."

Moreover, persons recovering from the trauma of separation are often in a bind because they want to be close to others but at the same time fear contact, Greenwood said.

"They are operating on a basis of failure," he said, noting that many suffer from a lack of self-identity which may have contributed to the breakdown.

The groups are designed to provide companionship without judgment, nourishing the individual's sense of identity.

Bright Idea Solves Space Problem

TORONTO (CP) — Space was a problem in the tiny townhouse shared by Lisa Titian, 14, and her mother. There was nowwhere for Lisa to study, Marlene Titian said, until she came up with an ingenious idea.

"I knew that in some homes closets had been converted into bars, so that sparked the idea," she said. "We just had the conventional shelving removed and installed a built-in desk and bookshelf."

Most students find they have to take to their bedrooms when it comes time to do homework.

Many Canadian homes aren't designed with study areas, say educationists. If there's a library or den, it's usually for the whole family to congregate in, rather than for one person to use for quiet study.

Kathy Dingle, a Toronto guidance counsellor and teacher said: "Even in the most ideal situations, with a quiet room, good lighting, a desk and bulletin board, the student seems to have a tough time using his study time effectively."

She said the student should form a daily habit of studying for a certain length of time each evening.

"An hour should be sufficient. If the student goes over his day's work every night and underlines the main points, it is easier for him to retain the knowledge.

"A further review on the weekends would really instil the lessons and then, when exam time comes, hardly any extra effort is required."

Miss Dingle said that once the student has set upon an effective pattern which leaves him time to do other things he really wants to do — watching television, talking on the phone and seeing friends — the parents should leave him alone.

"There are usually household chores the student has to do," she said. "These should be made clear ahead of time. It's important that homework does not become a source of antagonism in the home."

Miss Dingle said that basically homework is between the student and the teacher, "and the student should learn to deal with his responsibilities as soon as possible."

She said: "Naturally, a well-organized study area will help toward this ideal solution."

Reagan Tops Poll

A new Gallup poll shows Ronald Reagan has moved ahead of President Ford as the choice of Republican and independent voters for the GOP presidential nomination.

The poll showed Reagan was favored by 40 per cent of Republicans questioned in late November, Ford by 32 per cent. That was a sharp reversal from the Gallup figures in mid-October, which showed Ford leading Reagan 48-25.

Meanwhile a group headed by several house Democrats has begun a nationwide effort to draft Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey for the Democratic presidential nomination.

PETALUMA, Calif. — The Santa Clause at Mervyn's department store doesn't need any pillows for stomach padding.

Santa is Mrs. Deirde Von Tungeln, and she is eight months pregnant.

LONDON — Montreal-born Aaron Harry Levy, believed to be the oldest surviving graduate of McGill University, celebraated his 100th birthday Thursday.

PARIS — Canada's new ambassador to France, Gerard Pelletier, will present his credentials to President Valery Giscard d'Estaing next Tuesday — nearly two months after arriving in Paris.

MONTREAL — Police have arrested a 49-year-old electrician for allegedly attempting to defraud Loto Quebec of more than $700,000 by claiming he won the top prize in the Loto Perfecta lottery.

They said the man validated a form for the Dec. 5, drawing, placed markings on it corresponding with the winning combination and claimed he was a winner.

LAS VEGAS — Wayne Newton and Ann-Margaret have been named the top male and female performers in the fifth annual Las Vegas Entertainment Awards.

Don Rickles and Joan Rivers were named best male and female comedians, while comedian Gabriel Kaplan was selected best supporting act of the year.

MIAMI — Entertainer Jackie Gleason, divorced less than a month from his second wife, will marry Marilyn Taylor Horwish, a widow he met 25 years ago, next Tuesday at a private Miami club.

OTTAWA — The prime minister's office said today Trudeau has no definite plans to visit Japan next year, contradicting a report that the Canadian ambassador in Japan had told Prime Minister Takeo Miki of a planned visit.

MORRISTOWN, N.J. — Daniel R. Coburn, the court-appointed legal guardian for Karen Ann Quinlan, has quit in a legal dispute with the comatose woman's parents.

GENOA, Italy — The kidnapped son of an Italian sugar magnate, held for a ransom of $2.8 million, was set free early today, police said. Giovanni Schiaffino, 20, was abducted on Nov. 22 as he drove a girl-friend home. He wrote to his family last Tuesday saying that if the ransom were not paid his kidnappers would cut off two of his fingers and send them to his father. It was not known how much was paid for his release.

AKRON, Ohio — An unidentified Akron police sergeant will remember Nov. 23 for and a would-be benefactor some time.

The incident that became public Wednesday occurred that night — sergeant's birthday. A fellow patrolman, learning that the sergeant was about to observe another birthday, arranged a surprise.

That night there was a knock on the door of the police department communications room. The door swung open and a nude woman carried in a birthday cake with the sergeant's hat badge in its centre. She offered best wishes of the day, did an impromptu dance and left.

The department has ordered the instigator to work seven days off for having arranged the affair. The sergeant has been fined two days' pay — for failing to report the incident.

FISHKILL, N.Y. — Police say it must have been a case of robbing Peter to pay Paul that led a Poughkeepsie woman to the alleged knife-point robbery of a bank Wednesday.

Joann Burns, 20, held up one bank for $6,083 and then drove to a bank in nearby Poughkeepsie that was threatening to repossess her green Porsche, police said.

They said it was her car, noticed by a civilian near the robbery scene and then spotted outside the second bank, that led to her arrest on a robbery charge.

Police arrested her inside the bank and she surrendered without struggle, they said.

EX-SEXIST, DR. SPOCK CONFESSES

LETHBRIDGE (CP) — Dr. Benjamin Spock, internationally-known pediatrician and author, Wednesday admitted he has been a sexist but denied that he ever advocated permissive behavior.

"I am not permissive and never was permissive," the American doctor told a near-capacity audience at the university of Lethbridge, describing most of his theories as "no-nonsense" and "old-fashioned" in nature.

Dr. Spock said for 20 years after publication of his best-selling book Baby and Child Care, no one accused him of being permissive and a "corrupter of youth."

"The accusation came after I was indicted for opposition to the Viet Nam war," said Dr. Spock, terming it "a political accusation."

"People don't lie, they just thought it was a good idea to use me to explain why children were not behaving."

The doctor, however, admitted he had erred in his advice on male and female roles and said he attempted to "purge" sexism from a recent revision of baby and child care.

Moratorium To Salvage Marriages?

OKLAHOMA CITY (UPI) — A judge saved two marriages with a moratorium on divorce suits during last year's Christmas holidays and he hopes to do even better this year.

District Court Judge Raymond Naifeh announced Thursday he will accept no more divorce cases until the day after Christmas.

Naifeh says his ban on divorce cases has been criticized, but he thinks he is right to try to keep families together through the holidays.

"I might be technically wrong in taking this stand, but I'm convinced I'm morally right," he said.

Naifeh has posted notices declaring the moratorium on his courtroom doors and on both doors leading to his private chambers.

"I want to make sure the lawyers get the message," he said.

During the holiday season especially, he added, there should be time for tempers to cool, particularly if there are small childr— involved.

Redford Voted Top Star

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — For the second year running Robert Redford was voted the top money-making star in the United States by the people who care most — the theatre owners.

Exhibitors often prefer a top star in a mediocre movie to a good picture with so-so actors. Popular performers often bring in crowds when a movie doesn't justify a full house.

As was the case in 1970, 1973 and 1974, the singer-actress was the only feminine star to gain the golden circle.

Placing third was Al Pacino, on the strength of his performance in "Dog Day Afternoon."

Fifth was Paul Newman, followed by Clint Eastwood, sixth; Burt Reynolds, seventh; Woody Allen, eighth; Steve McQueen, ninth; and Gene Hackman, 10th.

It was Allen's first appearance in the top 10. Last year he wound up 12th. It is worth noting that Allen is the only comedian in the group.

Gene Hackman, who last appeared on the list in 1972, bounced back thanks to "French Connection II."

John Wayne, who is the all-time box office champion in the poll, did not appear in the top 10 for the first time in 25 years.

But old Duke did place 15th, behind Jack Nicholson, 11; James Caan, 12; Dustin Hoffman, 13; and Faye Dunaway, 14.

A curiosity was Liza Minnelli who was voted 16th in boxoffice magnetism although she did not have a new film in release during 1975.

The same can be said of Marlon Brando who ranked 23rd in the voting of exhibitors.

Following Liza Minnelli was Warren Beatty in the 17th spot, surprisingly far down the list in view of his hit, "Shampoo," which broke all records for Columbia Pictures.

SUBMARINE DAMAGED

FLENSBURG, West Germany (AP) — The 22-man crew of a West German Navy submarine escaped injury Wednesday when the vessel's conning tower was severely damaged in a collision with a passing ferry, a naval spokesman said. The submarine was submerged at periscope depth during a training cruise when the unidentified ferry passed over it to the east of the Danish Baltic Sea island of Moen. It was not known to what extent the ferry was damaged.

Popular Potted Plants for Gifts

By HILDA BEASTALL

It may seem unbelievable to some readers that we must remember that there is a "first time" for receiving a gift plant in a pot. Each year there are probably many in Victoria who have never before received such a gift.

First a few words about potted gift plants in general. In winter the following plants are grown in greenhouses on a large scale and sold by florists and other plant retailers: cyclamens, poinsettias, chrysanthemums and azaleas.

Hundreds of other plants can be and are raised and sold, but these four are the most common because they are also the brightest in color at this season.

When received in the home, the plants must be kept from high temperatures and from chill and draught. Contrary to current belief, a greenhouse growing the four plants listed will not have as high a temperature as your living room, but it will be a lot more humid — that is, the air will be moister in the greenhouse.

Choose a cool place in the room away from draughts of hot air from heaters and away from cold draughts from opening doors and windows. This is more important for the first few days the plants are in the home than it will be later after becoming acclimated to your conditions.

Good daylight is needed, but not direct sunshine, for this shortens the life of the flowering plants.

Poinsettia, with the scarlet leaf bracts, will take most sunshine since there are no real petals on the tiny flowers, therefore no wilting takes place. This plant should have its pot filled to the rim with water when the top soil becomes dry.

Allow the pot to drain into a dish below; empty the surplus after one hour; do not water again until soil is dry on top.

Use tepid to slightly warm water for potted plants in the home environment because of the more constant higher temperature than in the greenhouses where cold tap water is commonly used from hoses.

Cyclamens have red, pink or white reflexed petals, each flower on its own succulent stem, growing from a solid corm along with beautifully marked green leaves also each on a succulent stem.

This plant needs less frequent watering because the succulent stems and leaves, and the corm, are all means of moisture storage.

As the top soil becomes dry, pour tepid water in at the edge of the pot, never over the corm in the centre or it will rot away. Allow drainage to a dish below; empty the dish if any water remains after an hour.

A pot of chrysanthemums (most people know these plants by name) needs watering more often than the others. Give a thorough soaking when necessary instead of tiny drops often, and keep these plants in a cool place at night. Even on the floor near a door is cooler than on a table.

Since these are practically evergreen outdoor shrubs, they like a cool spot in the house and a good light without direct sun while in flower. This does not mean you can put them outdoors in winter even for a short period when still using them as indoor potted plants.

Having a tight fibrous rootball in the pot, watering of azaleas must be a long soaking so that the water penetrates the mass of roots and lasts the plant for a few days. Stand this plant in a dish of tepid water for an hour, noticing how much water it takes up.

If everything goes, pour more water in at the rim, then stand the pot in an empty dish to drain for an hour.

These four plants, and indeed many others, show somewhat similar signs of yellowing leaves when they get too much water or are in need of water. You, the person with the plant in front of you, will know if the top soil is wet and the pot is feeling heavier than usual — both signs of overwatering, and one cause of yellowing and falling leaves.

POLLING CHAOS

Thursday's provincial election was one of the most disorganized balloting events in B.C.'s history, a deputy returning officer charged today.

Margaret Bawlf, "no relation to Socred winner Sam", said in her long experience working at election polls she "never worked in an election as badly organized."

The voters list was out of date, she said, and a "great many people were sworn in as voters under Section 80 (of the Elections Act) at the polling stations."

Mrs. Bawlf worked at Poll 94 in the Victoria riding unsuitably located at the Cedar Hill Community Hall.

"We were crowded in the hall and an orchestra started practising three hours before the polls closed for a dance to be held there later in the evening.

"While we were counting the votes the orchestra and the dance was in full swing," she said.

Mrs. Bawlf, who has been working at the polls since the 1950s, said the majority of voters who did not show up to cast ballots were students.

She urged that provincial officials begin the practise of door-to-door enumeration to improve voters lists.

Indian Shocked

VANCOUVER (CP) — An executive member of the Union of British Columbia Indian chiefs said he was amazed and shocked to see the New Democratic Party defeated.

The NDP "will be replaced by a rag-tag group of opportunists," said Bill Wilson.

"How can people turn away from a government that has brought in such good legislation?" he asked.

"It is true that Bill Bennett has promised to deal with our land claims and we will seek a meeting with him once the new government is installed.

"But how can a bunch of opportunists who are interested in exploiting the resources deal with people who are the original owners of those resources?"

Wilson said he was happy with the showing of Frank Calder — who was elected as a Social Credit member.

Calder, a former NDP cabinet minister, was bounced from the cabinet by Premier Barrett in 1973 for personal indiscretions. He jumped to Social Credit following the dissolution of the legislature Nov. 3.

Defeat Costs Jobs

Hanson was one of a score or more political appointments made by the NDP through cabinet order while in power.

The executive and administrative assistants, whose salaries range between $17,000 and $25,000 annually, will undoubtedly leave voluntarily or be unloaded by the Socreds.

Hanson, who quit his archeologist's post with the Provincial Museum two months ago, was appointed administrative assistant to Consumer Affairs Minister Phyllis Young, also defeated.

There may be uncertainty in the future of other appointments such as B.C. Human Rights Director Kathleen Ruff, an unsuccessful NDP candidate in the 1972 election; Rentalsman Barrie Clarke, a former Liberal MLA and certain deputy ministers appointed in the past 3½ years.

Hassle with U.S. Over San Juan Island Lives Again in Helmcken Memoir

By HUMPHRY DAVY
Times Staff

San Juan Island would be part of British Columbia today if Governor Sir James Douglas had been allowed to have his own way.

This is revealed in a new book Reminiscences of Dr. John Sebastian Helmcken, a Victorian who played a major role in the political life of the then Crown colony of Vancouver Island and British Columbia.

After years of gathering dust in the provincial archives, the papers of the pioneer physician, one of the province's most distinguished men, have just been published by the University of British Columbia Press.

The crisis of San Juan arose in 1859 when U.S. General William Haney provoked an incident by sending a detachment of 60 men to the island on the pretext of protecting American settlers from the Hudson's Bay Company and British authorities.

It was sheer bluff as history shows the general did not have instruction from Washington to occupy the island, then considered a part of the Crown colony.

Helmcken writes that Governor Douglas, also holding the rank of vice-admiral, wanted the Royal Navy to take over the island.

'I know there would have been a collision and the island would have been captured had Governor Douglas had his own way," he states. "But although he was vice-admiral — the commanders of HM ships were dubious and wanted plain orders.

"Fortunately or unfortunately the Britsh Admiral just then arrived — so he superseded the authority of Governor Douglas and would not embroil the nations in any way on any account — there should be no bloodshed about this matter as far as he was concerned — he would await instructions."

Helmcken states that Douglas was deeply disappointed and later told him if he had had his own way the affair would have been quickly settled, the island occupied by the British and the diplomacy would have settled the matter.

The matter was subsequently submitted for arbitration to the German Emperor who decided in favor of the Americans because as Helmcken puts it the "Americans sent in their documents in better shape, more elegantly and more modernly put up than the English."

Helmcken's over-all observations on the issue were: "One hardly understands how it has come about that Americans, brave and bold as they are, should always resort to bullying. The U.S. will be a very aggressive nation some day."

Born in London, of German descent, Helmcken came to Victoria in 1850 to take up a position of Hudson's Bay Co. doctor. He became active in colonial assemblies and councils from the time the first assembly came into existence in 1856 until B.C. entered confederation in 1871. He died on Sept. 1, 1920.

The memoirs are edited by Dr. Dorothy Blakey Smith, formerly an associate professor of English at the University of British Columbia and more recently on the staff of the provincial archives.

Editing the papers started in 1973 was a tremendous task. It involved the indentification of places and people mentioned in the memoirs mostly by their surnames.

Then Mrs. Smith had to check, and test, and verify the accuracy of the Helmcken version of the historical events through which he lived.

She admits the manuscripts posed problems for her.

"It would have been possible, I suppose, to publish his recollections as they stood—stripped of all editorial comment—and people would still have read them with interest, and amusement," she said.

"But the UBC Press is committed to the cause of scholarly publishing in this province," she said. "It would have been an insult to let them go to press as they are. And even for the general reader, it seemed to me, some clarification of detail was almost imperative."

As she worked on the memoirs, she said she came to regard Helmcken with respect and admiration with a sort of "granddaughter affection."

"He was a man of complete political integrity, with a statesman" grasp of the future of his adopted country. He was a man of feeling too."

The memoirs also reveal that if it had not been for Helmcken the seat of government today would be in New Westminister instead of Victoria. The colonies of Vancouver Island and British Columbai were united in 1866.

At the time, Governor Frederick Seymour wanted the government of the united colonies to be in New Westminister, but Helmcken with a group of Victorians mounted a campaign against the proposal. He wrote to friends in England, admirals and other senior naval officers who had visited Esquimalt and won their support.

Victoria was finally proclaimed the capital on May 25, 1868.

It is also doubtful that British Columbia would have entered confederation without the support of the physican who was highly respected by Victoria.

Helmcken was at first anti-union but was won over to the side of confederation, and finally ended up mainly responsible for its terms.

After confederation, when he could have pulled any plum he wanted out of the B.C. political pie, Helmcken abandoned politics for medicine because he thought this a more stable source of income.

"My little ones must have their porridge," he said, "and I must provide it."

Helmcken married Cecilia Douglas, eldest daughter of Governor James Douglas and Ameila Douglas. They had seven children, of whom four survived infancy.

He had nothing but admiration for his father-in-law and describes him as a "very self-contained man — rarely giving his confidence to anyone, and to me scarcely ever," he considering me to be a "radical" — his abhorrence.

He supported Douglas's Indian policies later discarded by successive B.C. governments, an action which has resulted in today's native problems.

In later years when he looked back on the white man's treatment of Indians and nature, Helmcken speaks like some of today's sociologists and environmentalists.

"Now I look around and numerous are the waifs and strays . . ." he writes. "Forests have lisappeared, civilized off the face of the land; other kinds of vegetation requiring artificial care have been planted in their stead; the earth has been subdued and robbed ruthlessly, made the slave of man and treated as such."

PROBE SLATED INTO MARKING

University of Victoria senate Wednesday decided to establish a special investigation team to report on marking procedures.

The new committee will make recommendation for changes in the marking procedures by April, 1977, and a preliminary report by November next year.

Senate spent two hours discussing a special report of the adademic affairs committee which had urged a deadline for 1978, but during debate senators decided the date should be moved up.

Senators, however, threw out the report's second recommendation that university departments should set up separate marking review committees for the interim period.

Instead Dr. Betty Kennedy won general support for a motion which reaffirms the power of deans and department heads to look into marking discrepancies and deal with any misuses in grading.

The academic affairs committee had submitted its recommendations in a report that said there is a growing skepticism and lack of confidence in marking procedures in universities across the country.

Canadian Ban On Suspect Birth Pills

OTTAWA (CP) — Birth control pills banned Wednesday in West Germany and Britain because of a possible link to cancer have been off the Canadian market since 1972, a spokesman for the federal health protection branch said Thursday.

Dr. Albert Liston said American studies in 1972 of pills containing the hormone megestrol-acetate showed they caused cancerous tumors in dogs, after the dogs were fed 50 times the human dose over seven years.

He said these tests caused enough concern to warrant the withdrawal of the pills from the Canadian market.

BARRETT GOES DOWN WITH PARTY

Bill Bennett Rolls to Victory

British Columbia voters returned the province to Social Credit rule Thursday, bringing a dramatic end to the New Democratic Party's first, brief taste of office.

Bill Bennett's re-vitalized Social Credit party captured 36 seats in the 55-member house, leaving the NDP with 17 members — less than half its former strength.

In the biggest upset of the election, Premier Barrett lost his own Coquitlam seat as well as losing the strong 38-seat mandate he was handed in 1972 when voters rejected the 20-year rule of Social Credit under the new premier's father.

There is likely to be a recount in Coquitlam, where 38-year-old car dealer and Socred George Kerster narrowly defeated B.C.'s first socialist premier. If the count stands, the 45-year-old Barrett could look for a safe seat (or) he may have to return to the social work profession and the NDP will look for a new leader.

The possibility of recounts in as many as six ridings may not be decided until Dec. 23, when the final figures from returning officers in the ridings will be available.

B.C.'s other political leaders kept their seats, Bennett by a substantial margin in Kelowna; Gordon Gibson by a narrow vote in North Vancouver; and Scott Wallace by a good majority in Oak Bay.

Gibson and Wallace will both be their parties' only representative in a strongly polarized legislature. Wallace was the sole Tory before dissolution but Gibson lost his seat-mate David Anderson.

In accepting defeat in Port Moody early Thursday evening, Barrett wished the new government luck and promised to hand over the reins within a week.

"We have not lost anything tonight except the battle," he said.

"Little old fat Dave," as the premier referred to himself during the campaign, appeared shaken by the results early in the evening but later returned to his usual jocular manner and, joked with reporters and party faithful.

He remained in good spirits even after learning that he had been defeated.

In Kelowna, premier-elect Bill Bennett told a cheering crowd he would immediately set about putting B.C. back on the road of free enterprise.

"Tomorrow we go to work because this province needs a government to get to work right away to solve the problems," he said after thanking his supporters and the electorate.

He said his party won with people, not with flip slogans, and "put forward the strongest fighting candidates I have ever seen put together by a political party."

His father, who took power for 20 years in 1952 with a minority government, shared in the pandemonium of his son's victory.

"This is a great night for the people of British Columbia" said the elder Bennett as he blinked back tears. "A people's government is back in power again." The voters put their finger on the hot stove of socialism in 1972 "and tonight they have taken it away."

The NDP and Social Credit were the only parties to field full slates of 55 candidates as Barrett's snap election call Nov. 3 left the Liberals and Progressive Conservatives with depleted war chests.

The Liberals, under Gordon Gibson, who was elected leader 38 days before the 38-day campaign began, suffered their worst defeat in history in B.C. They had two seats in 1956.

The Tories under peppery Scott Wallace, a 46-year-old general practitioner, also hit a low ebb as polarization of

Island Bucks Trend

Vancouver Island bucked the Social Credit onslaught in Thursday's voting but the NDP just managed to hold five seats while the strong Socred challenge netted three.

A head-on battle in Esquimalt riding has Lyle Kahl of Social Credit with a shaky lead of less than 200 votes over the NDP's Frank Mitchell with over 2,000 votes yet to be counted.

That's the number of people whose eligibility has to be confirmed before their ballots are counted because they were not on the voters' list. The final total will be known in 11 days. Turnout in Esquimalt was 72 per cent.

Most shattering blow delivered by voters came in the two-seat Victoria riding where former Liberal leader David Anderson was destroyed, finishing a distant fifth.

Socred Sam Bawlf, who topped the municipal polls a year ago as alderman, showed he still has that vote-gathering magic by finishing first again.

In Oak Bay the personal popularity of Tory leader Scott Wallace once again carried the day over a powerful campaign by Social Credit. He held a 3,000-vote majority over Frank Carson.

Former Conservative Hugh Curtis, who is likely to be a cabinet minister in the new Socred government, proved switching parties hadn't hurt him a bit in Saanich and the Islands riding.

He turned back a challenge from Carol Pickup, a newcomer for the NDP, by better than 4,000 votes, well up from his majority of 2,500 in the 1972 election.

The NDP held its four up-Island ridings but only in Alberni did incumbent Robert Skelly have a relatively easy time of it, capturing slightly better than half the votes. At that, his 1972 majority was trimmed by 3,000 votes.

DP Priorities Polled Out

Cabinet Backs Postmen

Times News Service

OTTAWA — The cabinet Friday overturned an opinion by the Anti-Inflation Board that the postal workers' settlement of a 38 per cent wage increase over 30 months is too high.

"We thought it was in the greater public interest to let the agreement stand," said Prime Minister Trudeau after the meeting.

Trudeau insisted the cabinet's decision will not weaken the federal restraints program.

"It would if we were to do this consistently, but we 'are acting under the law and the regulations as they stand now," he said.

The government will seek royal assent to make its anti-inflation bill law later today or Monday — so avoiding any immediate repeats of direct cabinet appeal.

A special administrator — yet to be appointed from the revenue department — will handle cases the anti-inflation board decides are excessive. There also will be an appeals tribunal from board rulings.

Reaction from union and labor officials to the cabinet's decision was uniformly supportive.

"It's what I was expecting. I'm not surprised at their decision," said Joe Davidson, president of the 22,000 members of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers (CUPW).

Asked if he was happy about the decision, Davidson said:

"We went on strike for more so how can I be overjoyed at getting what we are justly entitled to?"

Joe Morris, president of the Canadian Labor Congress (CLC) said he anticipated the cabinet decision.

"I think they were wise in this instance, particularly in light of the involvement of Mr. Makasey (Postmaster-General Bryce Mackasey) right through the bargaining," he said. "Any other decision would have been intolerable."

Cabinet Cuts Pledged

KELOWNA — A "very, very difficult transitional time" faces British Columbia with the change from an NDP to a Social Credit government, premier-elect Bill Bennett said today after his overwhelming election victory.

The new Socred government will be faced with presenting a spring budget drawn up by the NDP administration during the fall, said Bennett.

New cabinet ministers will be asked to carefully review each department and its financial estimates for the new budget, he said, but time will be short and Christmas holidays for the civil service will make the task that much harder.

He pledged that the Socred's first budget will be balanced.

Without knowing the actual state of the province's finances, Bennett said he could still make the commitment that the Socreds will never go into deficit budgeting.

The NDP's budget plans may therefore have to be changed to keep within that pledge and the Social Credit's own election promises will also have to wait on the economy.

Bennett's new cabinet will not be unveiled until next week but the new premier promised as an immediate economic move, a cut in all cabinet salaries.

He would not specify how much the salaries will be reduced but ministers now receive $48,000 and the premier's wage is $52,000.

Bennett faced a barrage of questions at the morning news conference in his home constituency but his answers were mostly vague.

In many areas of immediate concern, the new ministers will have to make decisions on how to implement a new free enterprise approach.

There are difficult economic times ahead, said Bennett, and the new government will have to be realistic in its plans. That planning began today with meeting in Vancouver between Bennett and party and campaign officials.

The new government's first task will be the departmental

By LIZ HUGHES and KIT COLLINS

Victoria voters mirrored B.C.'s polarized vote Thursday, electing a Socred and an NDPer to the legislature in a race full of surprises.

Incumbent Liberal David Anderson was turfed out, showing only a poor fifth; alderman-developer Sam Bawlf topped the poll and for the first time in 42 years, Victoria elected an NDP representative, community worker Charles Barber.

The two-seat riding teetertottered until the last minute and at times it appeared Victorians might do the unexpected and elect two New Democrats.

Bawlf and his cheering supporters at the Pier 16 restaurant in the Princess Mary hailed the Victoria and the provincial Socred win as "fantastic," the only disappointment of the night being the defeat of running-mate Ian Rendle.

Barber's victory was eclipsed by the defeat of the party, the downfall of its leader and the rejection of Gordon Hanson as the second NDP candidate in the riding.

But it was a victory nonetheless and the crowd of about 400 NDP supporters had to take what it could get in a night that left many campaign workers in tears.

Anderson, surrounded by about 50 saddened Liberal supporters, took his defeat philosophically, insisting his party was selling a "luxury that the people of B.C. feel they can no longer afford."

The election was black and white, said the former Liberal leader, "It was either vote the rascals in or throw the rascals out."

The "straight polarization" of the election campaigns led to his defeat, Anderson said, with voters deciding they couldn't afford what the Liberals had to offer — "rational and careful debate."

Anderson and running mate Terry O'Grady conceded the race at about 10:30 p.m., hitting the NDP headquarters at the Union Centre first and then the Socred's sumptuous

Ex-Grits To Star In Cabinet?

By LINDA HUGHES

Speculation on the composition of Bill Bennett's cabinet began as soon as the Social Credit victory became apparent.

The three former Liberal MLAs will likely form the cornerstone of the ministerial group which will take over government business in about a week's time.

A Socred insider suggested today the new government is "long on victory and short on talent and experience" and the toughest jobs will undoubtedly be handed to Pat McGeer, Allan Williams and Garde Gardom.

The other nine incumbent MLAs will likely be up for cabinet posts along with a couple of former Socred members and a handful of hopeful newcomers.

Bennett has indicated he wants to keep the size of the cabinet down and the post of minister without portfolio for northern affairs will probably disappear.

But he has also promised a ministry of the environment and, in the future a department of inter-governmental affairs.

The finance portfolio will be a key to Bennett's juggling of positions.

He, like Barrett in opposition, has promised not to keep the finance job for himself, but, like Barrett, may decide he has to keep it under his thumb at least at the start.

IRA Gunmen Free Pair, Surrender

LONDON (UPI) — Police broke a six-day-old downtown London siege today and captured four Irish Republican Army gunmen who came out with their hands up.

The gunmen first freed Mrs. Sheila Matthews, 53, one of the two hostages they had held since police trapped the IRA men in the Matthews' apartment Saturday night.

All four gunmen were wedged into a small police panel truck which sped away, its siren wailing. Watching newsmen and passersby broke into applause.

The gunmen were wanted for an 18-month series of bombings in and around London which killed 27 persons and injured 540.

One was believed to be a man known as Michael Wilson, Britain's most-wanted terrorist. His fingerprints were found at the scene of the murder two weeks ago of Ross McWhirter, co-founder of the Guinness Book of Records, who was shot and killed on his own doorstep in the first such IRA assassination in the British mainland.

Scotland Yard chief Sir Robert Mark said the men would be charged with "a wide variety of crimes which come loosely under the heading of terrorism."

Mrs. Mathews was rushed to University College Hospital where spokesmen said she was "remarkably well considering the circumstances" and was being treated for shock. "She is all right," a spokesman said.

The four-man IRA gang was cornered Saturday night after a crosstown police chase in which — unusual for London — shots were fired.

Fraser Landslide Seen in Aussie Vote

Fraser and his opponent, ousted prime minister Gough Whitlam, made public appearances to rally support on the eve of nationwide balloting for the House of Representatives and the Senate.

Whitlam addressed a crowd of 7,000 in Sydney's Hyde Park while Fraser went on a handshaking tour of Victoria's cattle country. Their public appearances were due in part to the Australian policy banning radio and television coverage of elections three days prior to voting.

A nationwide poll predicted Fraser's Liberal-Country Party coalition would draw at least 54.9 per cent of the total vote against 41 per cent for Whitlam's Labor Party in the House of Representatives. Independent parties would receive about 6 per cent of the vote, the pollsters said.

In the Senate, the opinion-takers predicted 49 per cent of the nation's 8.3 million voters would back Fraser's party and 39 per cent would choose Labor. Twelve per cent of the vote was predicted for other parties.

ISRAELIS PUSH STATE

JERUSALEM (AP) — A group of Israeli intellectuals headed by a retired army general announced Thursday they will campaign for the right of the Palestinians to a state of their own.

The group has formed the Israel Council for Israeli-Palestinian Peace, which stated it would work to change Israel's refusal to accept a Palestinian state in Arab territory now occupied by Israel.

Uri Avnery, a left-wing publisher and former member of Parliament, told reporters the group was in contact with moderate Palestinians abroad, and believed the Palestinians abroad, and believed the Palestinian movement was about to drop its extremist stance in favor of a state in the Jordanian West Bank and Egyptian Gaza strip.

20% of UN Time Spent Waiting

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (UPI) — The 30th session of the 144-member U.N. general assembly has held its 1,104th social event of 1975.

The occasion was a luncheon for assembly President Gaston E. Thorn hosted by West German Ambassador Baron Rudiger Von Wechmar.

"When this year 1975 comes to a close, you and the members of your staff will have participated in 2,800 meetings here in New York during these 12 months alone, totalling some 5,200 hours of sessions.

"Of those 5,200 hours of meetings during this year of 1975, we spent about 20 per cent of the time waiting for the sessions to begin.

Nine out of 10 meetings failed to start on time. Every third session lasted longer than scheduled, which means delegates spent at least 700 hours — or a total of almost one month — longer in conference rooms than originally planned.

"One hour of plenary meeting, with translations into five official languages, cost the U.N. budget — and that is all of us — the round sum of $5,750 each.

"During the general debate of our assembly, 48 speakers used the English translation, 26 in French, 17 in Spanish, 14 the Arabic, 7 the Russian, two the German, two the Portuguese and one each the Chinese, Italian, Serbocroat and Laotian languages.

"All of them used at least 700 times the two words, 'Mr. President' in these 11 languages.

"Since the beginning of the 7th special session (convened for three weeks before the regular assembly), we can look back on luncheons, receptions, dinners and other forms of such reunions of delegates totalling 1,103 social events.

"It is this spirit that, at the end of this 1,104th assault on our livers and cholesterol levels, that I raise my glass to the president of the General Assembly."

Before The Judge

A 19-year-old youth charged in Victoria provincial court Thursday with failing to remain at the scene of an accident told Judge D. K. McAdam he didn't have a driver's licence because "so many of my friends were getting into accidents."

"I didn't want to drive at all," Steven Alexander Younger of 640 Dallas, said. "I had no desire to take the test."

Younger had been arrested early Thursday morning 20 minutes after police received a report of a car hitting a parked behicle on Dallas and then taking off.

The youth was also charged with taking a car without the owner's consent and not having a valid driver's licence. He pleaded guilty to all charges.

Despite defence counsel's plea to forego a fine because Younger was a welfare recipient, McAdam fined the youth a total of $125 to be paid at the rate of $25 a month. In addition, the judge banned Younger from driving in Canada for six months — with or without a driver's licence.

Judge William Ostler imposed a 30-day jail sentence on John McCallum, 50, of 135 Medana, who pleaded guilty to shoplifting two $3.25 bottles of after-shave lotion from the F. W. Woolworth store, 1200 Douglas.

McCallum, an admitted alcoholic, had a previous conviction for theft last spring.

James Watson, 21, of Kelowna, was sentenced by Ostler to 21 days in jail when he was found guilty of assaulting two policemen, resisting arrest and damaging a police car window Aug. 28.

Bill Bennett's Deserved Victory

In the first few minutes results fluttered back and forth like a fibrillating heart, but there was never any real doubt. Social Credit was on its way to a majority victory. Three and one half years of David Barrett's reformist government had been enough. The people were ready for a change. Only a little more than three years ago a fickle public turned out Social Credit because of boredom and lack of social change. Now they were scared, and it was back to tried and true Social Credit.

The night belonged to Bill Bennett. Sneered and jeered at, this neophyte politician took a discredited humbled party by the scruff of the neck and molded it into a winning political machine. Despite this newspaper's lack of sympathy for Social Credit, we admire Bill Bennett. He has taken a disparate group of people, and corralled them under his father's banner. What emerged belongs to the younger Bennett. Now he must hold them all together, a task far more formidable than the victory achieved Thursday night. Even the initial task of forming a cabinet could spoil the new premier's leading edge. The uneasy coalition that calls itself Social Credit must prove to British Columbians its leadership capabilities. Minutes after victory was ensured the jockeying began. It is up to Bennett to prove the trust British Columbians have invested in his leadership.

As for David Barrett and the New Democratic party, the Times is sad they did not gain victory and a second term. In defeat Barrett was gracious, saying the Social Credit victory was well deserved, a natural result of the British parliamentary system. With hindsight we can say that the NDP relied too much on the powers of its leader. Barrett is a formidable politician. But too much responsibility was placed on his shoulders and not enough on the party. Put another way: too much Manny Dunsky, not enough NDP record. The clown and anguish act was not enough for the circus which is B.C. politics. Barrett emphasized nationalism and abstract values. Bennett concentrated on the economy and money in the pocket. The British Columbian voter is more concerned with what's on his hip than his mind. It's a human failing and easily exploited.

Given all this, the NDP increased its popular vote from something slightly over 39 per cent in 1972 to 40 per cent in 1975. At the same time the party dropped 21 seats to Social Credit. The results of 36 Social Credit opposed to 17 NDP are almost an exact reversal of the 1972 results. B.C. politics are still a joust between two extremes. The Times was heartened to see Dr. Scott Wallace re-elected in Oak Bay and Gordon Gibson in North Vancouver Capilano. Vestigial moderate politics remain an option in the province.

The electorate's decision is inviolate. If the Times hoped it might have gone another way, we still wish Bill Bennett's government the best of luck. He has worked long and hard for this victory and deserves its fruits. The premier-elect spent two hours in our editorial offices last Saturday morning to provide us with background. It is this kind of attention to detail that makes a winner. As Bennett said Thursday night, "We didn't try to win it with glib slogans . . . we'll bring strong leadership back to this province." The Times found strong leadership in David Barrett, but we're willing to be convinced by Bill Bennett.

Habitat Hassle

There have been few reversals as dramatic as Vancouver city council's decision this week to switch tracks suddenly and support the United Nations conference on human settlements — called Habitat for short — scheduled to be held there next June.

Despite the rationalizations, the attempts to justify the abrupt shift, Vancouver's city fathers do not come out of the affair looking very good. Council cited fears for the city's safety as one of the main reasons two weeks ago when it voted 9-1 to ask Ottawa to cancel the conference.

Unwillingness to shoulder the extra policing costs — estimated to be about $500,000 — was also a factor, but it seems that distaste for the UN's recent anti-Israeli stance and the Palestine Liberation Organization played a bigger part.

Only one of these factors has changed. Urban Affairs Minister Barney Danson has offered $300,000 to help with the costs of providing security for the conference. Despite the noble sentiments expressed two weeks ago council swung around to back Habitat 7-3 this week.

We think it was the right decision, and only regret that Vancouver city council couldn't have spared itself a lot of embarrassment by doing the right thing two weeks ago. With the two contradictory decisions it managed to alienate just about every sector of opinion, and now looks like it only came around to backing Habitat because it was bought off by Ottawa. All in all, a shabby performance.

". . . have you got anything in edible hats? . . . I'd like to honor an election bet . . ."

New Buildings Add to Inflation

CALGARY — Speaking of inflation, have any of Ottawa's resident wizards taken a run lately at calculating the weight to attach to the waste factor in the inflation spiral?

Anyone with half an eye can see it operating out of control all across the country from high-rise construction to supermarket shopping carts. For starters let's take a once-over-lightly look at a single aspect of conspicuous waste in commercial construction in such places as Toronto, Winnipeg and Calgary.

The best place to start is smack in the centre of the King and Bay intersection in Toronto where you could almost say conspicuous waste began. It was here 15 years ago that the Toronto-Dominion bank launched the chartered banks on a round of bank president one-upmanship.

Until the Toronto-Dominion Centre came along, Canadian banks had opted for restrained oppulence in their head offices. They went for buildings which gave depositors a feeling of confidence in the solid, if stolid, feet-on-the-ground soundness and stability of the repositories of their savings. Then T-D changed everything with its black glass window-wall skyscraper at King and Bay.

Gauche Edifice

As the T-D bank was going up the well-mannered and gentlemanly restrained putdowns of the project emanating from the executive suites of the other banks filtered out to their customers in the boondocks. This gauche edifice would undermine T-D's image with conservative customers. It would starve for tenants. It would . . .

The prophets of doom were soon chewing on crow. The response was so good that T-D was soon planning to add a mate to the first building. Nothing is ever so enchanting to executive chiefs of chartered banks as some other banker's idea that jells.

The T-D centre was magically transformed from a white elephant into a burr under the seats of other bank presidents. Even the thought of an upstart outfit like T-D upstaging them turned them a bilious green.

First to act was the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce which got going on a higher, wider and gaudier edifice across the street. The Royal Bank of Canada snuck into action a couple of blocks to the south. The bank of Montreal turned the corner of Bay and King into the most people-polluted corner in the country by belatedly getting into the skyscraper act.

The wastage involved in all this has been nothing short of horrendous when one contemplates the magnitude of destruction of perfectly good and useful commerical space involved. The T-D had to buy up and dismantle a dozen commercial buildings before it began demolishing its own imposing former head office. These structures provided scores of business enterprises with adequate office and retail and wholesale space at rents they could afford.

The Bank of Commerce displaced only two or three substantial office buildings. Now Montreal is reducing everything to absurdity. In order to compete with the other banks in the race up the status pyramid, it has demolished its own, new, postwar 16-storey building, the Royal Trust 10-storey building and the 22-storey Toronto Star building.

TORONTO
. . . inflation heading for sky

What all this amounts to is that the chartered banks and-or their developer partners have combined to destroy several million square feet of perfectly useable office space in buildings that were good for another 25 or 30 years at least. It was space which was developed when building costs were at rock bottom, mortgage rates were low and buildings were built to last. Most important of all, it was office and retail space which required a miniscule economic rent compared with what will have to be charged for the new stuff.

But the project now being developed by the Eaton consortium a few blocks north of King Street will probably have put more people out of satisfactory low-cost rental premises than all the banks put together.

So much for Toronto. In Winnipeg, the thing is just beginning. There, for the last year, the Trizec Corp. has been bulldozing away the entire block of buildings at the west's most famous intersection — Portage and Main.

When it gets through it will have wiped out a score of old office buildings and stores which have survived several Winnipeg booms and busts. Many of the buildings were obsolete. Many of their tenants hung onto business by their teeth. But they survived because rents were low.

Within the area, however, were several prospering businesses which did not want to move. To assist the site clearing, the city resorted to expropriation to get rid of them.

The Calgary experience is more akin to that of Toronto than Winnipeg. It has been going on here for 10 years and is just now reaching a peak. Two chartered banks are joined with developers in the skyscraper competition.

To make room for its 45-storey tower, the Bank of Nova Scotia bought up and demolished the town's most commodious movie theatre, a 10-storey hotel and a next-to-new office building, along with half a dozen prosperous retail stores.

Rents Doubled

Directly across the street the Bank of Montreal also demolished a 10-storey hotel, an office building and a dozen stores on two avenues and another street.

What is the impact of all this destruction of perfectly usable and thoroughly satisfactory accommodation on the cost of doing business in Canada? Certainly the loss of so much commercial space has inflated rents in surrounding accommodation. One displaced tenant reports that he is now paying $8 a square foot for office space, about double his previous rent.

Rents as a cost of doing business are reflected in the price of everything we buy and every service we use. Can any country afford to be as profligate as Canada has become in destroying so much real wealth in the form of commercial property?

And replacing it with less durable and twice as expensive substitutes? In normal times, never mind during inflation? Or does nobody in this country any longer believe in that ancient axiom — waste not, want not?

Immature Hysteria

I always felt that Canadians were above the sort of immature hysteria about pornography that seems to affect our neighbors to the south. It seems I was wrong.

While reading your Nov. 24 issue I came across a disturbing article. Some local concerned citizens felt the need to purge the "smut" from our local stores. If this is a free country then I have the right to decide whether or not these magazines appeal to me or not. I don't appreciate having somebody else deciding what I can read. If these people were so concerned about good government we would all be a lot better off.

They feel that my children have the right to learn about how the world and the universe operate, but not how their bodies operate. It seems they would rather have their daughters come home pregnant than let them know that contraceptives are available. I feel it is wrong to dictate to a child on how he or she will live his life. It is better to give all the information you can and let him make his own decision. I think you will find most kids are smarter than you think. — Earl D. Goudie, Sooke.

Labor Leaders

Now that an impartial (CBC) poll shows that Canadians are in favor of economic restraints, (61 per cent for, 22 per cent against, the rest undecided), maybe the Len Guys and Joe Morrises and Grace Hartmans of this fair country will realize that "labor" is not the CLC, nor is it B.C. Federation of Labor, nor is it Joe Davidson, but rather the millions of plain workingmen and workingwomen who are being led by the noses by a handful of opportunists who shouldn't even be allowed to organize a frisbee tournament.

On the other hand, don't bet on it, for if these people had any common sense, the situation would not have risen in the first place. In short, the situation is so ridiculous that one can talk more sense to a shop foreman than one can to a shop steward. And if the so-called labor leaders become any more removed from their memberships, they'll fall off the globe, — Zdravko Krznaric, R. R. 1, Cobble Hill, B.C.

Business Help

In reference to the article, Firms Back Convention Centre, in the Nov. 24 Times:

I had the opportunity to visit a convention centre at a seaside resort in the state of Oregon, some three years ago, this centre was built at practically no cost to the city through the generosity of local and state wide lumber and building material companies. The materials used varied extensively with each type being indicated by a wall plaque describing the nature of the material be it heavy lumber, veneer, or masonry along with name of company donating same. Are our British Columbia companies not prepared to follow this type of example, especially for the capital city of the province? A brochure of same and a more detailed letter was forwarded to Mayor Peter Pollen during the early part of his tenure in city hall. Maybe the new team at city hall could look into this method of saving the taxpayer some dollars and have a convention centre that the companies would be proud to have participated in. — H. Alexander, 4 Gorge Road East.

Amnesty Global

Not since Hitler's time have we seen the kind of torture that is now practised in the Soviet Union.

A young mathematician, Leonid Plyushch, was picked up, hustled off to a psychiatric prison against the agonized protests of his family and once in the prison he was injected with massive doses of insulin and other drugs, enough

Plyushch had signed a petition to the United Nations protesting the lack of civil liberties in the Soviet Union. The same petition had been signed by the physicist Andrei Sakharov, but Sakharov has just been awarded a Nobel prize for this kind of activity.

Then Plyushch had also sinned by writing privately some essays on freedom and civic responsibility, and the secret police found out that these essays existed.

Protests on behalf of Plyushch have been strong and worldwide. In August, 1974, more than 950 distinguished mathematicians from all western countries sent a telegram to Premier Alexei Kosygin. The telegram was never acknowledged. In April, 1975, a world-wide demonstration was organized by the International Committee of Mathematicians To Defend Plyushch. Telegrams and other messages rained down upon Soviet embassies all over the world.

In Canada there were messages from lawyers, psychiatrists, Fellows of the Royal Society, scientists, and the mathematics department of every major university. But when the Soviet embassy in Ottawa was asked some days later for their response to these messages their reply was that they had received no messages.

On Oct. 23, a mass meeting was held in Paris. Sponsored by a galaxy of French leaders, including Jean Paul Sartre, Nobel prize-winning physicist A. Kastler, the dean of the mathematical community in France, Henri Cartan, this meeting called together not merely mathematicians and scientists but thoughtful persons in all walks of life who realize that to let stand the kind of torture endured by Plyushch is to weaken the moral fabric of our society.

To save Plyushch will require persistent increasing pressure. Amnesty International has been acting vigorously on behalf of Plyushch. Anyone and any organization that would like to help can communicate directly with the embassy of the U.S.S.R. in Ottawa and ask that the torture of Plyushch be stopped.— Israel Halperin, Professor of Mathematics, University of Toronto.

Appalling Decision

After 20 years in the Canadian aircraft industry, I was very interested in your editorial comment (Dec. 2) on Ottawa's decision to spend a $1 billion on 18 Orion aircraft from Lockheed in the U.S.

Some five years ago the LRPA (long range patrol aircraft) study group was set up in Ottawa to recommend a replacement for the Canadian CL-28 Argus. The very nature of this group, being made up of representatives from departments of defence, transport, supply and services, tended to preclude a sound independent decision based on the "national interest."

It was quickly established that the serious contenders were the Boeing 707, the DH-HS Nimrod and the Lockheed Orion. The 707 has a flight profile quite unsuited for patrol function; the Nimrod is a modified Comet—a 20-year-old aircraft; the Orion is a modified Electra—another 20-year-old. None of these planes has advantages over the Argus which justify a $50 million per aircraft price tag. In fact each has penalties—range being one (as your editorial rightly states).

Ottawa, it appears, is ready to spend some $50 million per plane for an aircraft whose civil version could not be worth more than $5 million. Apparently we are spending $45 million per aircraft for custom equipment, support services, spares and the electronic package.

For our billion dollars we are getting an old turbo-prop aircraft to replace an old piston-engined aircraft, better crew comfort and detection gear, and some Canadian employment through offsetting contract arrangements. These modest improvements are not worth the price.

This is a bad deal. It's another case of expediency in place of wisdom; another step in the long trail of appalling decisions by Ottawa in this field which started in 1958 with the expensive deployment of the useless Bomarc missiles.

The often-stated Liberal defence policy is the creation of a highly mobile, well-equipped, self-contained striking force—ready for immediate deployment at home or abroad. How this policy can be served by committing the bulk of our hardware funding to the Lockheed Orion is a mystery that maybe Mr. Trudeau can answer.—Ian Cass, 3844 Merriman Drive.

60 YEARS AGO

From the Times of December 12, 1915

VANCOUVER — Parker Williams, socialist member of the B.C. legislature, delivered a strong anti-administration address before a a good-sized audience at the Labor Temple today under the auspices of the People's Forum. He raked Sir Richard McBride, Attorney-General Bowser and others of the cabinet with cutting sarcasm and pointed charges of negligence and maladministration. Such handling of provincial affairs, he declared, were responsible for the present financial conditions, though Sir Richard was trying to hide behind the cloak of the kaiser. It was not the war which had caused the slump, said Williams, but the manner in which the Conservative government had handled affairs.

Popular Potted Plants for Gifts

By HILDA BEASTALL

It may seem unbelievable to some readers that we must remember that there is a "first time" for receiving a gift plant in a pot. Each year there are probably many in Victoria who have never before received such a gift.

First a few words about potted gift plants in general. In winter the following plants are grown in greenhouses on a large scale and sold by florists and other plant retailers: cyclamens, poinsettias, chrysanthemums and azaleas.

Hundreds of other plants can be and are raised and sold, but these four are the most common because they are also the brightest in color at this season.

When received in the home, the plants must be kept from high temperatures and from chill and draught. Contrary to current belief, a greenhouse growing the four plants listed will not have as high a temperature as your living room, but it will be a lot more humid — that is, the air will be moister in the greenhouse.

Choose a cool place in the room away from draughts of hot air from heaters and away from cold draughts from opening doors and windows. This is more important for the first few days the plants are in the home than it will be later after becoming acclimated to your conditions.

Good daylight is needed, but not direct sunshine, for this shortens the life of the flowering plants.

Poinsettia, with the scarlet leaf bracts, will take most sunshine since there are no real petals on the tiny flowers, therefore no wilting takes place. This plant should have its pot filled to the rim with water when the top soil becomes dry.

Allow the pot to drain into a dish below; empty the surplus after one hour; do not water again until soil is dry on top.

Use tepid to slightly warm water for potted plants in the home environment because of the more constant higher temperature than in the greenhouses where cold tap water is commonly used from hoses.

Cyclamens have red, pink or white reflexed petals, each flower on its own succulent stem, growing from a solid corm along with beautifully marked green leaves also each on a succulent stem.

This plant needs less frequent watering because the succulent stems and leaves, and the corm, are all means of moisture storage.

As the top soil becomes dry, pour tepid water in at the edge of the pot, never over the corm in the centre or it will rot away. Allow drainage to a dish below; empty the dish if any water remains after an hour.

A pot of chrysanthemums (most people know these plants by name) needs watering more often than the others. Give a thorough soaking when necessary instead of tiny drops often, and keep these plants in a cool place at night. Even on the floor near a door is cooler than on a table.

Since these are practically evergreen outdoor shrubs, they like a cool spot in the house and a good light without direct sun while in flower. This does not mean you can put them outdoors in winter even for a short period when still using them as indoor potted plants.

Having a tight fibrous rootball in the pot, watering of azaleas must be a long soaking so that the water penetrates the mass of roots and lasts the plant for a few days. Stand this plant in a dish of tepid water for an hour, noticing how much water it takes up.

If everything goes, pour more water in at the rim, then stand the pot in an empty dish to drain for an hour.

These four plants, and indeed many others, show somewhat similar signs of yellowing leaves when they get too much water or are in need of water. You, the person with the plant in front of you, will know if the top soil is wet and the pot is feeling heavier than usual — both signs of overwatering, and one cause of yellowing and falling leaves.

Movies

Small Town Girl (xx), on 11 at 11:30 a.m. Jane Powell, Farley Granger and Ann Miller star in this lightweight 1953 musical about the romantic adventures of a New York playboy arrested for speeding in a small town.

Village of Daughters (xx), on 5 at 12:30. A strained 1956 English-made comedy about a British salesman stranded in a small Italian town, starring Eric Sykes and Scilla Gabel.

Island of the Blue Dolphins, on 11 at 2. No rating available on this 1964 children's adventure drama about an Indian girl's life on an uninhabited island.

Tall Story (xxx), on 5 at 3. An entertaining, well-acted 1960 movie version of the hit Broadway comedy about a determined college girl out to win a degree and a husband, starring Anthony Perkins and Jane Fonda.

The Perils of Pauline (x), on 7 at 3:30. A corny 1967 spoof of old silent movie melodramas, starring Pamela Austin and Pat Boone.

Doctor Doolittle (xxx), on 6 at 8. The whole family will enjoy this entertaining, music-filled fantasy, based on Hugh Lofting's children's stories about an eccentric doctor who can talk with animals. Filmed in 1967 with Rex Harrison, Anthony Newley and Samantha Eggar.

Heidi (xxx), on 8 at 8. Another family favorite is this charming 1965 film version of the children's classic about a mountain orphan's efforts to adjust to big city life. Filmed in Germany and Switzerland with a European cast.

Morning Departure (xxx), on 9 at 9. Richard Attenborough and John Mills head a fine cast in this exciting 1950 English-made drama about a group of men trapped in a submarine.

Oklahoma Crude, on 5 at 9. Television premiere of this 1973 theatrical release set in the Southwestern oil fields of 1913. Faye Dunaway plays a tough-embittered owner of a wildcat rig, with George C. Scott a wandering roustabout who helps her battle the oil syndicate that controls the area.

Down to the Sea in Ships, on 9 at 9. Another in the PBS series of silent classics, this one made in 1922 about whaling in old New Bedford, Mass.

The Big Broadcast of 1938 (x-xxx), on 11 at 11. Bob Hope sings his now-famous theme song, Thanks for the Memories, in this entertaining 1938 musical, also featuring W. C. Fields, Martha Raye and Dorothy Lamour.

Assault on a Queen (xx), on 12 at 11:30. A predictable, badly acted 1966 adventure about a plot to rob the ocean liner Queen Mary while she is in transit. Cast includes Frank Sinatra, Tony Franciosa and Virna Lisi.

Boom! (xx), on 7 at midnight. An opulent, lengthened 1968 film rendering of a short Tennessee Williams story (The Milk Train Doesn't Stop Here Anymore) about an enigmatic poet who comes to comfort a dying woman in her villa on a Mediterranean island. Starring are Elizabeth Taylor, Richard Burton and Noel Coward.

The Singing Nun (xx), on 8 at midnight. Debbie Reynolds plays the title role in this 1966 comedy based on the true story of a Belgian nun, whose songs made her an international celebrity.

Devils of Darkness, on 5 at 1:10 a.m. No rating available on this 1965 English-made thriller about vampires.

A Dream for Christmas (x-xx), on 6 at 1:20 a.m. An excellent all-black cast highlights this 1973 made-for-TV drama about an Arkansas minister who moves his family to a challenging Los Angeles parish.

The Day the Fish Came Out (xx), on 8 at 2:05 a.m. Michael Cacoyannis (Zorba, the Greek) directed this offbeat 1967 comedy-drama mixing romance, farce and a nuclear crisis, starring Tom Courtenay and Candice Bergen. The normally talented writer-producer-director Cacoyannis fell flat with this one.

Crew Faced Danger In Silent Movie

The sailors and townspeople of New Bedford, Massachusetts are captured in Elmer Clifton's whaling epic, Down to the Sea in Ships. Presented on KCTS-9's The Silent Years, December 13 at 9:00 p.m., Down to the Sea in Ships combines the drama, heroism, hardships and chilling majesty of the early pursuits of the mighty bull whale, when man fought whale on more equal terms.

By using real people and real situations, the camera crew were in constant danger — from either a whale crashing into their fragile boats or from being attacked by the ever-present scavenger sharks waiting for victims.

However, as the chief cameraman asserts, they "had only one thought and that was to get the real photographs of real action at any cost." At one point, when a whale was harpooned: "We noticed he kept coming closer and closer . . . he sent one boat high in the air, leaving the crew to the mercies of the sharks . . ." Then, as the whale weakened, "anxious to get some wonderful closeups, we drew nearer. Almost before we had realized it, he had changed his course and was bearing down upon all with all his speed.

We were barely able to get out of his way a few feet as he shot past us, his large mouth wide open and his wonderful strong teeth plainly visible." But they did get the shots.

The whaling sequences provide the climatic scenes in the film, but interwoven with these is a love-triumphs-over-all plot involving the austere Quaker (William Walcott), his daughter (Marguerite Courtot), her beau (Raymond McKee), the unscrupulous Samuel Siggs (J. Thornton Baston) and his cohort (Patrick Hartigan). The cast also features an early appearance by Clara Bow.

DANNY KAYE (centre) is assisted by Met Opera artists Judith Blegen and Enrico Di Guiseppe in demonstrating a point in this scene from, Danny Kaye's Look-In at the Metropolitan Opera, to be telecast on Saturday at 5 p.m. on Channel 12.

Satire Brightens 'Saturday Night'

JOHN J. O'CONNOR

(NYT) — The new Saturday Night, is a live, late-night comedy variety series carried on NBC weekly (except for the first Saturday of each month, when NBC News' Weekend magazine gets the 90 minutes). In the beginning, several weeks ago, the Saturday Night format didn't quite work.

George Carlin, the comic, turned uncharacteristically heavy. Paul Simon and Art Garfunkel, briefly back together again, sang nicely but added little else to the proceedings.

About 75 per cent of the surrounding material seemed to meander pointlessly. In more recent weeks, however, at least 75 per cent has proved to be sharply and sometimes wickedly on target. NBC has found itself a source for legitimate pride, a commodity in scarce supply at any network these days.

The way Lorne Michaels, producer, sees it, Saturday Night has one overriding mission: to allow writers and performers to stay as close as possible to their material and talent, with a minimum of laundering or processing for mass consumption.

Still only hovering at the age-30 mark, Michaels dates his career to writing for The Phyllis Diller Show and Laugh-In. Even with the pace-setting Laugh-In, he notes, the difference between what he wrote and what finally got on the air — after being filtered through other writers, producers and performers — was consistently depressing.

However, he did meet Lily Tomlin through Laugh-In and subsequently became a writer and co-producer for her four television specials.

Miss Tomlin also happened to be the host of last week's Saturday Night, by far the best of the season's lot. (I should confess at this point that I am helplessly in love with Lily Tomlin. It's best to get that kind of thing out in the open and avoid silly arguments about objectivity.)

On Saturday Night, Mr. Michaels is putting together a form of comedy that he conceives is reflective of his "peers," most of them shaped by the 60's and 70's, by Vietnam and Watergate. A couple of years ago, the producer says, he and some friends, including Miss Tomlin, vowed to change the content complexion of TV — not forward to something like "The Age of the Documentary," but backward to something approaching defined styles.

As a "TV baby" and an unabashed admirer of television, Mr. Michaels insists that, while growing up, he could recognize immediately when a comedy skit was written by, say, Mel Brooks. He seeks a rebirth of both that definition and that recognition.

His writers (including Anne Beatts, Chevy Chase, Michael O'Donoghue and Tom Schiller) carry offbeat credits ranging from the National Lampoon to The Great American Dream Machine to documentaries on Buckminster Fuller and Anais Nin. His Not Ready for Prime-Time Players company (John Belushi, Gilda Radner, Jane Curtin, Garrett Morris, Laraine Newman and Danny Ackroyd) has been recruited from Off Broadway productions and improvisational revues.

The mix is held together and, to some extent, shaped by the program's guest host, who works closely with the company in frantic rehearsals. That Saturday Night attracts "name" talent to work for scale salaries indicates the impressive lure of the program's conception for performers.

Robert Klein, the comedian, was good, although his stand-up routines interfered somewhat with the over-all pacing. Candice Bergen was better, blending easily and attractively into the company.

ACTOR STARTED AS A TRAINMAN

By JAY SHARBUTT

NEW YORK (AP) — Kevin Dobson, formerly of Jackson Heights, N.Y., the 523rd Military Police Battalion, and the Long Island and Santa Fe railroads, was back in town recently, helping Kojak solve crimes.

Dobson, as fans of CBS' top cop series knows, plays Detective Bobby Crocker, the young gendarme at whom Kojak often barks.

The 32-year-old actor, who still has a sturdy Jackson Heights accent, sort of rolled into show business. He says after his army days, he spent 2½ years on the Long Island Line as a trainman and conductor.

Susan, his bride-to-be, and Jane, one of his two sisters, thought he was good-looking enough to seek work on TV commercials as an extra.

So the conductor got sidetracked into that line of work. But he stayed with the railroad just in case. He said that one day, an actor he knew introduced him to an agent. The agent sent him to audition for a part in a play The Impossible Years.

He got the job and later toured the states in the play, but not before befuddling the producer, who asked Dobson to tell him about the background of Kevin Dobson.

And that is how Dobson became an actor. He toured with the play, then studied acting at New York's Neighborhood Playhouse while driving cabs and tending bar to keep body and soul alive.

He also landed small parts in six films, including The French Connection, then ventured to Hollywood in 1971 and got into TV films as a heavy in one segment of Mod Squad.

Acting jobs still were few and far between. So, he said, he hooked on with the Santa Fe Railway in Los Angeles as an apprentice engineer, working early morning hours and door-pounding by day.

He understudied Jon Voight in a Los Angeles production of A Streetcar Named Desire — he abandoned the railroad for this particular trolley — but never got the big TV break he sought. Discouraged, he returned to New York. Then he went back to Los Angeles for a possible job in a new NBC series called Chase. He didn't get it, but landed the Kojak job a month later.

Kojak Strikes It Lucky With Championship Horse

By VERNON SCOTT

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — If Telly Savalas' hair grew back chances are it would come in long, blond and curly.

And television's bald but golden greek could fall into a manhole and come up with a handful of drachmas.

Recently producer Howard Koch asked Savalas if he'd like to invest in a race horse to help out a friend. As a favor, the star of Kojak said sure, why not?

"I didn't know anything about horses," said Savalas on the set of his CBS-TV show the other day. "I still don't.

"I'm just a slob who goes to the track once in a while, loses money and curses the breed. So I didn't pay much attention to the horse. One day Howard insisted I go out to the track and look at our racer.

"So all right, he's a horse. All horses look alike to me. Howard insisted I name him. So I did." Telly revered his late father who took him to his first horse race as a boy in New York. He dubbed the nag Telly's Pop in honor of his father, not for the lollypops he devours on the show.

"It sounds weird," said the actor, "but from the moment I named him something happened to that horse."

One of the things that happened to the 2-year-old bangtail was winning ways. In the past year it has entered six races and won five of them.

Telly paid $3,000 for the animal. To date it has won purses totalling $300,000.

"I'd rather be lucky than smart," Savalas said happily. "If he wins the California Juvenile Stakes he will be the first horse in history to win California's triple crown. And he's a cinch to go to the Kentucky Derby, baby!"

Now telly finds himself in the winner's circle every time his horse runs.

"Track officials tell me they never see the circle so crowded," he beamed. "All my friends and relatives are there to help us celebrate. He's a stretch runner so he comes from far back in every race. It's a real thrill.

Savalas will play the title role in Nick the Greek at Universal pictures, the first Greek movie hero to come along since Zorba. Telly is proud of his hellenic background and will play Nick to the hilt. "Nick always paid off," he said. "So have I. and I welcome the chance to put a gambling spirit on the screen. Win or lose, a real gambler has an attitude which transcends the gaming tables. "It's the joy. The fun is not in winning or losing, it's the game that counts. "I gamble all the time. I played Las Vegas, turned out a record album, sang for the Queen of England and directed myself in my own show. Either I've got a lot of gall or I'm a real gambler.

"And remember this, my friend, Prince Philip and I spoke to one another in Greek at that royal appearance. He's a Greek prince you know. Not English.

"The secret to playing a gambler is never showing a quiver of emotion, no finger trembles. You can't tell by looking if a real gambler is loaded or busted, but he always dresses like he's got a million.

Can Soaps Survive Hour-Long Format?

By RALPH TAYLER

(NYT)—"When you act in an hourlong TV show, and appear in three episodes a week, your private life becomes just about as frantic as that of a soap-opera character," says George Reinholt, who prefers the traditional half-hour format that allows him to look up, now and then, from the grindstone.

But the pressure is on within the industry to expand the daytime serial, and actors are having to accommodate to it. Recently, the CBS soap opera As the World Turns grew from a half-hour to an hour, spurred by the success of NBC's Another World, which went to an hour last January, and the same network's Days of Our Lives, which followed suit in April.

CBS took note that shows with high ratings, like its own As the World Turns, could hold their viewers over an entire hour, whereas there is always a risk with a half-hour program that the audience will scatter when 30 minutes are up.

Also, costs do not double when a half-hour soap opera expands to 60 minutes—but advertising revenues do. It is perhaps not common knowledge that daytim programming is where the profits are, while nighttime television just about breaks even.

The reason is cost: five one-hour segments of Another World can be produced for $130,000 — approximately what it takes to turn out one half-hour episode of say, All in the Family.

Soap operas are an assembly-line operation that use sets concentrated in one studio, lower-priced talent and only one taping session.

In contrast, prime-time talent comes high; more time is devoted to rehearsals; and two tape sessions are used to insure quality — all of which accounts for the cost differential.

Thus, for the networks, a daytime serial is gravy and the hour format can make it even richer by increasing the ratings.

Preoccupied with love and death, the soap opera camera moves relentlessly between home and hospital and counts the loss. The death rate in the hygienic, storybook towns of daytime serials appears to be higher than in the slums of 19th-century Marrakesh, and marriage fail with depressing regularity.

One actress, patting her face and finding it puffy, realized she had been crying for half a year.

For those who deal with their quotidian grief in other ways, the soap opera may seem laughable or deplorable. But the actors who work in the medium are convinced that the emotions they project are real.

And it would be callous not to admire at least the gameness with which they tackle the unlikely job of acting the same character in daily portions of an under-rehearsed play that goes on for, say, 20 years.

It's demanding work and, with the evolution of the hour show, getting even more so.

The players in Another World, for instance, now put in an 11-hour day at NBC's Brooklyn studios, producing the equivalent in time of about three feature films a week.

Understandably, the actors in As the World Turns have been approaching the new 1:30 to 2:30 p.m. format with trepidation, using military phraseology like "hitting the beach" as though expecting casualties.

So that their lot will not appear harder than it is, it should be explained that most continuing performers in a soap opera average about three days a week on the job, some weeks putting in as much as five and others one or two, depending on where the story line in which they are involved is going.

When the plot does stray far from them, worry may spoil their leisure, since they don't want to become mere horse-holders or, worse than that be killed off to create a suitably lachrymose widow.

One actor whose soap wife has just been killed to keep him interesting is Don Hastings, who has been Dr. Bob Hughes so long in As the World Turns that his real-life neighbors pester him for medical advice. He started in TV soap operas in 1956 with The Edge of Night and has been with his present show for 15 years.

Hastings likes the steady work that soap operas almost alone provide in a country where repertory theaters are rare. He has worked in show business since the age of six, when he sang in a radio program, Coast to Coast on a Bus.

"Radio was much easier," he recently reminisced. "You could literally have a running part in two or three soaps at the same time you were doing nighttime radio and a play."

Hastings recalls when he was in I Remember Mama on Broadway—just the first and third acts. Once a week between the acts he would taxi to the RCA Building to take part in the half-hour radio show One Foot in Heaven.

There are compensations for the daily soap-opera grind. When one actor was asked the difference between stage and soap acting, he said, "Oh, about $30,000 a year."

Many of the regulars on these serials live among the squireachy of Westchester or Connecticut or in Manhattan apartments that run to wood-burning fireplaces.

George Reinholt had driven his salary up to $70,000 a year on Another World before he was dropped after seven years (death by helicopter accident).

Because he had built up a personal following, he was able to move to a different soap, ABC's One Life to Live. (Serial hopping used to be anathema.)

Although actors in daytime serials can afford the lives of prosperous burghers, they are denied the status granted stage actors. Soap actors feel put down by their confreres in New York, and it rankles. Mary Stuart, who has been playing Joanne Vincente in CBS's Search for Tomorrow since its inception in September 1951, is the only actress to have won an Emmy for her work in a daytime series. Miss Stuart has been thrice married in the serial: "I always met someone at my late husband's funeral."

The low estate of daytime serials can also threaten career mobility. "If you get on a soap opera you are burying yourself, because of the attitude of the people in the hiring positions of the other media," says Carolee Campbell, Nurse Simpson in NBC's The Doctors.

Although a streteh in a soap did not bury Academy Award-winner Ellen Burstyn, who played in The Doctors in the mid-1960's under the name Ellen McRae, her career did not begin to take off until she was well away.

Stefan Schnabel, Dr. Stephen Jackson in CBS's The Guiding Light and the son of pianist Artur Schnabel, says the [illegible] doesn't care if an actor performs in soaps, but the movies, snobbishly, do.

It can be particularly difficult if a serial actor gets too thoroughly identified with a role — hard to avoid when doing the same part day in, day out. Schnabel claims that he lost the chance to play a rather sinister character in The Exorcist (later dropped from the film) because of his daytime identity as the gemuetlich Dr. Jackson.

Actors in the days of live soap operas were like stunt pilots looping-the-loop without a parachute. But now even with tape, economic pressures are such that footage is rarely reshot.

Explains Mary Fickett, who plays Ruth Brent Martin in ABC's All My Children, "If you're supposed to be crying—you can't fake that—you have to be crying."

Victoria Wyndham, describing what it is like to work in the hour-long Another World arriving at a dead run at NBC's Brooklyn studios at 7 in the morning and returning home in Connecticut on the run at 8 at night, still feels there are moments when she suddenly connects and her role springs to life.

PERRY COMO shares a Mexican Christmas with guests Vikki Carr, the Captain and Tennille and the world famed Ballet Folklorico, in a holiday music special to be telecast on Monday at 8:30 p.m. on Channel 7.

Study Says Sesame St. Widens Poverty Gap

By NOEL EPSTEIN

WASHINGTON (WP) — A new battle has erupted over a study of Sesame Street that contends that, to the extent the television program helps preschoolers at all, it widens the educational advantage of more affluent children over those from poorer homes.

The study, done by a team headed by psychologist Thomas D. Cook of Northwestern University, is based on a new analysis of earlier research, mainly 1970 and 1971 data gathered by Educational Testing Service, Princeton, N.J.

In a rebuttal included in the new work, Seasme Street Revisited, the original ETS researchers asserted that the educational gap between advantaged and disadvantaged children "was not important to Children's Television Workshop (CTW)," producer of the show.

ETS researchers Samuel Ball and Gerry Ann Bogatz added: "We would certainly counsel any group whose aim is to close the gap not to use publicly available television as the delivery medium."

But the new study, financed and published by the Russell Sage Foundation, noted that CTW president Joan Cooney, in originally proposing Sesame Street, stated that its purpose was "to promote the intellectual and cultural growth of preschoolers, particularly disadvantaged preschoolers."

The show, which uses numerous minority-group settings, also is widely perceived as placing special emphasis on the less advantaged, and the Cook team said that some ETS statements had indicated disadvantaged children may have been the main beneficiaries of the program.

But the new study, which concentrates chiefly on six-month data for 1970, found that "there was no evidence that any gaps were being narrowed because of Sesame Street."

Nor was there any indication that the show was having any special learning effects on children generally in a single season "except for some letter-related skills," the study said. "Third, if the series was having any effects on the academic achievement gap, then the data from viewing surveys, from our analysis of the ETS data" and from another study "indicated that the direction of such effects was toward widening rather than narrowing the gap," it stated.

Earlier reports of education gains, the study suggested, were attributable in good part to encouragement given by ETS researchers to parents and children to view the program. The encouragements included home visits before the viewing season, buttons, ballons and magazines and weekly visits during the 1970 study.

The problem, the study suggested, is that viewer surveys indicate that, when such encouragements are gone, children in less advantaged homes do not watch the show as often as those in more affluent families.

The Cook team said that parents skeptical of its findings may have children who view the show for more than one season, may be the more affluent, and may attribute to Sesame Street learning gains "which, at their stage of development, they would have learned from their environment anyway."

The ETS researchers, however, had other objections in their rebuttal to the Cook team's findings.

They questioned the representativeness of the Harris viewer data that was chiefly used by Cook and said other data showed "the vast majority of inner-city preschool children view Sesame Street."

They also said the Cook team "carried out highly conservative and at times misguided analyses, and arrived at conclusions that are not very sensitive to the positive impact of Sesame Street.

"Our view, however, is doubtless based on our value tht a television program that helps preschool children in a variety of areas . . . is to be encouraged for its successes rather than put down for what it might be failing to do."

Seven Women (x), on 5 at 3:30. Director John Ford got a little carried away with this absurd 1966 melodrama about mission personnel in China circa 1935, trying to protect themselves from a barbaric warlord. Miracle of Morgan's Creek (xxxx), on 11 at 9. The real miracle here is director Preston Sturges, and the way in which he was able to deal comically, with a theme that would not have been allowed by the censors at the time (1944). The story concern's a small-town girl who gets drunk and becomes pregnant, thanks to a variety of obliging GI's. Unfortunately she can't remember which is the father, and the "miracle" concerns the way in which the problem is solved. A perceptive and entertaining comedy, with excellent performances by Betty Hutton, Eddie Bracken, Diana Lynn and William Demarest.

Movie Sound Effects Challenge Imagination

Squeeze a sack of cornstarch, or crunch up a styrofoam cup — it's the sound of footsteps in crisp, dry snow. Shake a feather duster and there is the unmistakeable sound of a bird taking flight.

On the screen a huge machine is boring through layers of rock and earth. Recording the sound to go with it is Ken Page in a small room, watching the action and grinding rice in a coffee mill.

The world of sound very often must be created and woven as artfully as the film's visual fabric. Page has been doing this at the National Film Board in Montreal for eight years now and has become the grand master of sound effects here.

When the film crew comes back from a day in the hills, shooting a skier's glide down the slopes, the script may talk about the joys of skiing in the utter solitude of wilderness. But the sound track betrays this little white lie with background noises of trucks and cars from the nearby highway. So the sound image must be reconstructed to fiz the scenario. The editor wipes out the original track and fills in with sound effects.

Page makes a denim bag out of an old pair of jeans, fills it with soda crystals, then sweeps a stick across it, making a perfect ski-swish. The effect is created by a combination of the denim and wood textures and the sound world achieved is the perfect compliment to the visual.

Shooting sights and sounds together often gets to be time-consuming and costly — when conditions are right for one, they're usually wrong for the other. So post-sync — filling in parts, or the entire sound track, after the film is shot — is being used more and more frequently.

This is common practice for feature films, but used to be thought of as unnecessary for documentaries. When they felt that a "true" effect could be achieved by recording sights and sounds together.

But even in documentaries, when the camera closes in on the man swinging a sledge-hammer, the microphone may lose the dramatic crash in a jumble of background noise. However, to increase the volume of the sledge-hammer, everything else gets louder too and the sound confusion is not at all how the scene really was. Reality must be recreated with a sound effect.

One of the most difficult effects Ken Page had to reproduce recently was for the NFB documentary In Praise of Hands. A segment filmed on location in Africa, showed a tribe of natives dying cloth, which was tied in a series of small knots. Then they pulled the cloth apart to separate it into layers. For some reason this separating sound was not on the track, and it was hardly practical to go back and record it again.

"Everything I tried sounded like cloth ripping instead of separating," Page recalls his efforts to find a sound effect.

Then he discovered a certain cloth texture (the revolving towel roll in an NFB washroom, as a matter of fact). When he pulled it tight and ran his finger nails along it, he got THE sound.

Materials for the made-to-measure sounds come out of an oversized closet just behind Studio A. This 'closet' is every five-year-old kid's dream, with empty bottles, toy cars, bits of string, hammers and nails, odds and ends of wood, metal and cloth in every imaginable size, shape and texture. There are three-foot square frames of cement, tile, metal, marble, wood, gravel and sand, and a wide assortment of shoes, boots, slippers and clogs — all for creating footstep sounds to order. Single-footedly, Page can re-create a 20-man squadron marching.

When the fight scene in the NFB's feature film Why Rock the Boat, wasn't loud enough, Page, always willing to oblige, went into his little room, turned on the recording machines and threw himself around, bounced against walls, tripped over chairs, pounded garbage cans. Mixed properly it can sound like a proper brawl.

The mixing unit, or sound consul, is a vital tool in creating sound effects. It' s the size of an office desk, looks like a cross between a pipe organ and a spaceship control panel. As many as 24 different tracks of sound can go through, to be mixed and balanced and come out in one tape. — the sound track for the film.

Special effects aren't always necessary. Short cuts are possible when it's a question of background effects and if the sound doesn't have to be syncronized exactly to the visual.

The National Film Board has a library of some 12,000 sounds, which film makers use to fill out their sound tracks.

Cars make up the largest category, says Joe Curtis whose job it is to catalogue and organize all the sounds dumped on his desk by film and sound men coming back from shooting on location.

"You've got different makes of cars, you've got them coming and going, you've got the sound of the ignition key turning, the engine starting, cars on dry pavement, on wet pavement," says Curtis.

The next largest category is "atmospheres," the back-drop sounds — a cafeteria, a museum, a train station. The library even has stashed away some rather exotic sounds — a horse's stomach after a full meal, just as one example.

The sound library grew up by accident. Editors would keep sounds they recorded on location, because they knew they'd be able to call them up later when they needed them. Now the problem is one of organizing all the collected sounds, because each new one is put in the book at the end of the list.

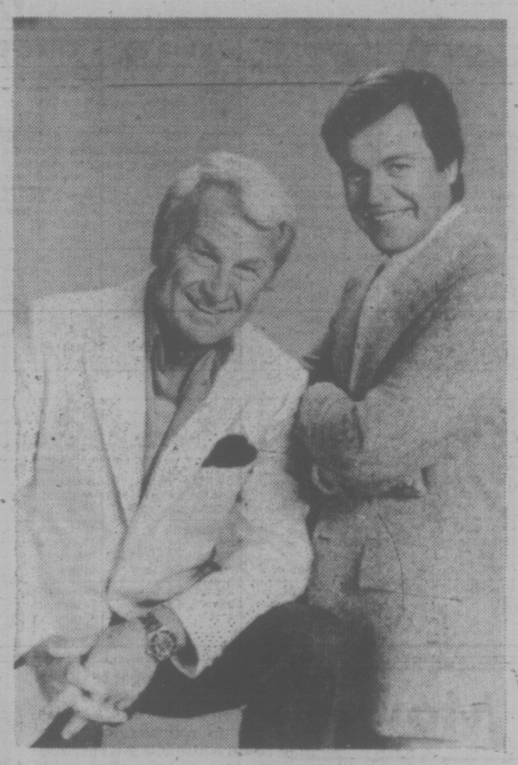
KRIS KRISTOFFERSON will appear with his wife singer Rita Cooledge in tonight's edition of Soundstage, a contemporary music series telecast on Tuesday at 10 p.m. on Channel 9.

CANNON HONORED

William Conrad, who will be entering his fifth season as the popular private eye in Cannon on the CBS Television Network this fall, has received high tribute from his peers in the Southern California Broadcasters Association.

Conrad, who started as a radio producer before becoming the voice of Matt Dillon in "Gunsmoke" on the CBS Radio Network and later assuming directing and action assignments on television, was honored for his outstanding contributions to the broadcast industry at the association's annual awards banquet.

Previous reiplent of the honor was Groucho Marx.



SWITCH—the new series starring Eddie Albert and Robert Wagner, and one of the few new programs to survive the disasterous 1975 TV season, will be telecast tonight at 9 p.m. on Channel 12 and 10 p.m. on Channel 8.

Miracle on 34th Street (xxxx), on 8 at 12:45. Repeat of a delightful holiday favorite starring Edmund Gwenn as Kris Kringle, a department-store Santa who tries to prove to everyone that he is the real Mr. Claus. Supporting cast includes Maureen O'Hara, Natalie Wood and John Payne.

Her Twelve Men (xx), on 11 at 1. Greer Garson plays a teacher at an all-boys school who is courted by two men, in this lightweight but entertaining 1954 romantic drama. Her co-stars are Robert Ryan and Barry Sullivan.

Portrait of a Mobster (xx), on 5 at 3:30. A tough 1961 crime-drama, strictly for fans of gangster moves, about the rise and fall of Dutch Schultz, notorious hood of the Prohibition era. Vic Morrow stars.

Terror on the 40th Floor (xx), on 8 at 9. A 1974 made-for-TV "disaster" drama, about a group of people trapped on the top floor of a blazing skyscraper. Cast includes John Forsythe, Anjanette Comer, Don Meredith and Joseph Campanella.

We're No Angels (xxx), on 11 at 9. A predictable, but entertaining 1955 comedy starring Humphrey Bogart, Peter Ustinov and Aldo Ray, as a trio of Devil's Island escapees planning to rob a family, who become involved in its personal affairs instead.

Returning Home, on 4 at 11:30. No rating available on this 1975 television remake of the 1946 Oscar winning drama, The Best Years of Our Lives, about three returning Second World War veterans trying to readjust to civilian life and enduring the traumatic effects of war. Cast includes Dabney Coleman, Tom Sellnick and James R. Miller.

The Chairman (xx), on 12 at 11:30. A somewhat implausible 1969 espionage drama starring Gregory Peck as a top U.S. scientist sent to Communist China on a vital mission. Slightly silly as Peck is carrying around an explosive device sewn into his head.

Git! (xx), on 2 at midnight. An outdoor children's adventure about two youngsters and a renegade dog.

The Naked Prey (xxx), on 6 at midnight. Cornel Wilde produced, directed and stars in this frightening but fascinating 1966 adventure about one man's struggle to survive in Africa's wilderness. Mr. Wilde does a fine job in all three departments.

The Hound of the Baskervilles (xx), on 8 at midnight. Peter Cushing and Christopher Lee star in this 1959 English-made version of the Sherlock Holmes-Conan Doyle mystery about murder on an eerie estate guarded by a massive dog.

Golden Girl (xx), on 7 at 12:30 a.m. A 1951 musical based on the life of Civil War dance hall entertainer Lotta Crabtree, starring Mitzi Gaynor and Dennis Day.

The Devil and Miss Jones (xxx), on 8 at 1:50 a.m. Jean Arthur, Robert Cummings and Charles Coburn star in this pleasant 1941 comdey about a department store tycoon who takes a job, incognito, in his own store. It's dated, but fun.

Under My Skin (xx), on 6 at 2 a.m. An ineffective 1950 film rendering of an Ernest Hemingway story about the racing game and a one-time crooked jockey's efforts to go straight. John Garfield and Luther Adler star.

CORNEL WILDE

RISK PAYS STUNTMAN

By VERNON SCOTT

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — When the leading man dives from a two-story building, falls from a racing horse, wrecks a car at high speed or socks the heavy in the teeth, odds are good that it is the work of Hal Needham.

Needham is the highest paid stuntman in Hollywood and the founder of Stunts Unlimited, an elite corps of 34 courageous daredevils.

A tough cookie of 38 years, Needham has lost count of the number of movies he's worked, but he appeared in more than 100 Gunsmoke episodes and 187 Have Gun Will Travel shows.

"Things have been fine for the past five years," said Needham, celebrating his 20th year in the business. "But for the eight years prior to that it was very thin. The committee on anti-violence almost had us starving.

"Most of the stuntmen specializing in horses quit the business because nobody's making horse operas anymore. But the western stunt guys were getting a little old anyway."

Needham is smart enough not to specialize. Although he owns a herd of 180 horses he uses in stunts, Needham does it all — falls, fights, cars, fires, motorcycles, explosives, underwater stunts.

He's worked in as many as five different television episodes in a single day.

Most of Hollywood's top male stars of the past two decades have been doubled by Needham in dangerous scenes.

"No actor does all his own stunts, no matter what he says," Needham said. "If a producer has 5 million bucks tied up in a picture he's not about to let a guy like Burt Reynolds wreck a car when he can get a dummy like me to do it.

Needham's highest jump was from 80 feet. But his most dangerous stunt was for an industrial film when he jumped a pickup truck, with a 15,000 horsepower rocket engine 128 feet through the air — 40 feet off the ground — over a lake.

"That was a little more than a year ago," he explained, "and I broke my back when I landed. Seven months earlier I'd broken my back in a John Wayne movie, MCQ."

Needham, who seems bright enough otherwise, has broken 42 bones. Enough stitches have been taken in his carcass to embroider the text of Ulysses on a beach towel.

"We try to reduce the danger to a minimum, of course," he said. "And then we prepare for accidents with alternate plans.

"For instance, if I'm turning over a stagecoach, I try to take into consideration what moves I have to make if it flips in the wrong direction. Without those emergency plans you get hurt.

"I'd say most stuntmen are injured working with horses. They have a one-celled brain and change their minds right in the middle of a stunt no matter how many times they do it right in rehearsal."

The SPCA is always after Needham to take it easy on his own livestock. He's still one of the few stuntmen who performs a "Running W." That's the spectacular spill a horse takes running at full speed.

"They're my animals," he said. "I train them myself, and they don't get hurt."

His highest paid stunt was one he claims was the easiest. An insurance company paid him $25,000 to drive an air bag-equipped passenger car into a brick wall at 25 miles per hour while the cameras rolled. The test took 20 seconds.

If the air bag had failed to function, Needham may have added a few more broken bones to his total.

For that reason he needs the high pay just to meet his life insurance premiums.

But then Needham has never been a lounge lizard. The great-grandson of a Blackfoot Indian and a native of Memphis, Tenn., he was a lumberjack tree-topper, army parachute tester and sky diver before becoming a stuntman.

He says, "I've never turned down a stunt."

Of course no one has yet asked Hal Needham to play a nude scene with Raquel Welch. Now that's dangerous.

Liberated Actress Busy Playing Traditional Women

By VERNON SCOTT

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — There's a Women's Lib lag in Europe, according to actress Jacqueline Bisset, due in part to the way females are portrayed in motion pictures over there.

Jacqueline is the almost too beautiful English girl who has been working abroad steadily for the past three years.

In Italy, England and France — where she starred in The Sunday Woman, The Spiral Staircase and Le Magnifique respectively — there is no changing of languages to erase the barricades of sex.

A housewife is still a housewife in Italy, not a family engineer. In England a female committee chief is still chairman, not chairperson. In France the feminine suffix "ette" is immutable.

"European films deal with the traditional female role," Jacqueline said thoughtfully. "No one objects to that. I think it is a reason why European women are not as advanced in the liberation movement as Americans.

"The English woman is more lib conscious than the French who continue to use charm and manipulation to achieve their ends.

"The place of the woman as a family figure still predominates over there. The woman gets her way, draws attention and admiration not by throwing her weight around but on the strength of her femininity. This is especially true in France, Germany and Italy.

"I noticed many women abroad already are tired of working and would like to stay home and raise families.

"I don't take sides in these matters except from my point of view as an actress.

"Here in Hollywood, we complain about the lack of roles for women in films and television. It is the same with foreign actresses.

"There is a dearth of female stars in London, Rome and Paris. Romy Schneider is the only one I know who works steadily in French and German pictures."

"Catherine Deneuve, Julie Christie and Charlotte Rampling do quite well, too, but that is about all of them."

Although she makes her home in the Hollywood Hills, Jacqueline remains an English citizen and is the busiest actress, foreign or otherwise, on either side of the Atlantic.

In addition to the aforementioned movies, she starred in The Orient Express and Murder on the Bridge. Currently she is co-starring with Charles Bronson in St. Ives.

"It's been three years since I've made a picture in Hollywood," she said. "The last was The Thief Who Came to Dinner.

"There were several tempting offers to keep me working in Europe, but I needed to balance out my career.

"It was time to get back to Hollywood and work in the United States again.

"When I came home I was astonished how many movies were offered me. I can't explain it except that I've been out of town and returned looking healthy, happy and chipper. Now there are four different films pending for me when I complete St. Ives.

"My last three movies had me playing dramatic, introspective women who rarely smiled. Now I have the opportunity to be loose and twinkle. It's rather a welcome relief."

JAQUELINE BISSET stars with Dean Martin in the hit movie, Airport, to be telecast on Friday at 8 p.m. on Channel 4. In this article she talks about the Women's Lib lag in Europe.

PART TWO OF FLYING RISKS

Today Canada has no laws, only Federal regulations used as guidelines in contract negotiations, to govern flight time limitations for pilots and in this, the second of a two-part report on air safety, Correspondent Michael Maclear details the problems of pilot fatigue, its dangers and the constant pressure under which pilots and crews work while on long non-stop domestic flights and international flights with their multiple time zone changes.

In Canada the subject of pilot fatigue has received scant attention and Maclear points out the urgent need for an aggressive accident prevention policy to stop these factors coming into combination to produce an accident.

"There is every cause for concern," reports Maclear. "In a recent study, the American Airline Pilots Association says that 93 per cent of the pilots under study complain of fatigue. An Australian survey found 75 per cent 'exhausted' after duty. A British report shows that at final landing pilots are only working to 70 per cent of their capacity.

"In a ten day period," he continued, "one pilot crossed 52 time zones, completed two-thirds of his monthly flying time and has put in as many hours as most of us work in a month, yet medical findings suggest we need one day to adjust to each time zone flow. The implication is that improper performance due to fatigue will result in a hazardous situation."

This episode, entitled The Men in the Cockpits, is the second of a two-part report, to be telecast on Thursday, December 11 at 9:30 p.m. on Channel 8.
